D. C. School Heads Clash Over Soviet Bulletin Ban

Education Board Head Calls Corning Confiscation Edict Avowal 'Hogwash'

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

A bitter jurisdictional row has broken out between District school officials over the recent barring of the Soviet Information Bulletin from public school libraries here.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning last night said he ordered confiscation of the several Russian propaganda magazines, sent to senior high school libraries the past several weeks, "because the publication is not on the list of periodicals approved by the Board of Education for school libraries."

The board is the reviewing body, he said, and "I, therefore, was only following regulations. I had no alternative."

"Hogwash," Sharpe Says

"That's so much hogwash," said C. Melvin Sharpe, president of the District Board of Education.

"Certainly the board gives the final say on the reading matter placed on school library racks, but it is the school administrative officers who actually study these magazines," he explained.

"If Corning and Nelson (Norman J. Nelson, first assistant school superintendent, who executed Corning's confiscation action) thought they had such a controversial publication," said Sharpe, "they should have brought it to our attention before acting."

Corning said earlier that the USSR Bulletin had not reached any local school when the board last considered publication approvals.

To Ask Formal Report

Sharpe said he would ask Corning for an immediate formal report on how the banning directive came about.

On the broader question whether school officials should pass judgment on what Government publications school children may read, Sharpe commented:

"I have never seen the magazine. I want to obtain copies of it and study in light of the magazine America which our Government distributes in Russia. I want to compare the Russian Bulletin with our State Department propaganda efforts."

The unsolicited Soviet magazine has also been barred from schools in Springfield and Fall River, Mass.; Columbus, Ohio, and Newark, N. J.

Taking Less Stern View

That the State Department is taking a less stern view of the publication than school heads was indicated in a speech yesterday by George V. Allen, retiring Assist-

Relief Supplies Start Pouring into 'Starving' Town

Shallmar, Md., Dec. 10 (AP).—Truckloads of relief supplies began arriving today in this poverty-stricken town whose only industry—a coal mine—has been shut down since last March.

It was no splash of conspicuous charity—just work trucks hauling donated food and clothing.

From Cumberland, 50 miles away, where most of today's aid originated, came word the Optimist and Lions Clubs are setting up a relief station and plan to send a daily truck with supplies as long as they are donated.

Shallmar is a small town of about 50 families who are dependent solely on operation of the Wolf Den coal mine. The mine, however, worked only 19 days last spring and shut down completely last March.

A Killer, 10 Minutes After . . .

By Gene Jones—The Washington Post

"WANT ME TO DOLL UP?"—That's what James Abbott Rigsbee, 35-year-old self-styled "tough guy," said to the cameraman as he sat in a police patrol on Ninth st. early yesterday about 10 minutes after he shot and killed Joseph (Big Joe) Scheve in a poolroom

Douglas Stuart Is Named GOP Treasurer

Succeeds J. S. Kemper, Who Resigned Because Party Funds Dwindled

Appointment of R. Douglas Stuart, Lake Forest, Ill., as treasurer of the Republican National Committee, was announced last night by Guy George Gabrielson, committee chairman.

He succeeds James S. Kemper, who resigned last month saying the party's reserve cash had dwindled to $90,000 and that he "had promised to resign if our funds went under $125,000."

The new treasurer is vice chairman of the board of the Quaker Oats Co.

Gabrielson stressed the new treasurer's familiarity with problems of the farmer, saying:

"He is a lifelong resident of the Midwest, with wide acquaintanceship with farmers, plus personal experience in farming and ranching."

Stuart said:

"I have never had any previous political connections, and I do not have any personal political ambitions. I accepted the position of treasurer of the national committee after careful consideration and saw in it an opportunity to serve my country, and that is the basis for my acceptance."

Tells How He Killed Gambler

Slayer of Scheve Admits Kidnap-Robbery 10 Days Ago

By Jean Reiff and Robert Thompson
Post Reporters

A dapper and calm "Ninth street character" smilingly admitted to police yesterday that he shot down and killed Joseph Herman "Big Joe" Scheve, District gambler. He then also confessed his part in a recent kidnap-robbery here.

The man is James Abbott Rigsbee, 35, who was held yesterday without bond on a charge of murder. He also was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon because one of the bullets he fired at Scheve in a poolroom at 913 9th st. nw., went astray and wounded a bystander.

Police also placed robbery charges against him in connection with the slugging and abduction of a truck driver here December 1.

Rigsbee gave his address to homicide squad detectives as 1734 Trinidad ave. ne., but when booked at No. 1 Precinct, he gave it as 1806 N. Oak st., Arlington.

Sells Pocketbooks

The prisoner, a former taxicab driver, said his present occupation is selling pocketbooks.

Scheve, who sometimes used the alias of Henderson, was convicted here last April of running a high-stakes dice game in a residence at 2730 Woodley pl. nw., and also on assault charges growing out of the game. He allegedly struck a Lancaster (Pa.) businessman over the head with a pistol when the latter protested losses of $7500 in the place.

Scheve, when shot down, was at liberty on bond pending appeal of the convictions.

Police records showed last night that in November, 1940, under the name of "Joseph H. Henderson, an engineer," Scheve was arrested and ordered held by a coroner's jury for the stab murder of Jerry Swisher, 29, in front of a restaurant at 14th and H sts. nw. Swisher

Marked Coins Make 'Squealer' Of Piggy Bank

Frank R. Hackl's pig was losing weight. This worried Hackl, for the feed being cash money—since the porker was a piggy bank—was not something that just springs out of the earth.

And so Hackl, a Supreme Court policeman who lives at 1440 Chapin st. nw., fed piggy some marked coins.

Later, he told Municipal Court Judge Armond Scott yesterday, he and a Metropolitan Policeman dumped out the contents of a purse belonging to a servant in Hackl's home and found 29 cents in the marked money.

The Metropolitan Policeman, Pvt. Joseph Snigocki corroborated Hackl's story. The maid, Catherine Saltysiak, 33, who denied the charge, was held in $300 bond pending probation report. Disposition of the case was continued for two weeks.

Parkside's Novel Playground Dedicated at Silver Spring

(Agnes E. Meyer writes of Montgomery Schools. Page 1, Section II)

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Designed by a young father who works in guided missiles, a child's playground which may some day change the face of playgrounds the world over was dedicated yesterday in Silver Spring.

A warm and comradely air in the crowd of parents who built the playground and the children who will use it cut through the cold day at Parkside Elementary School, where the ceremonies were held on the playground itself. Seldom, truly, has a community had such a right to pride.

"The greatest single step forward in playground equipment I have ever seen," Agnes E. Meyer, main dedication speaker and for 19 years active herself in recreation, described the playground. "What you have done here . . . will be an inspiration to your fellow-citizens in the whole county, the State and throughout the Nation."

Another speaker, Katrina Tiedman, 11 years old and student president of Parkside School, who wore a pea jacket and a red plaid skirt, gave one of the best summations of the playground.

"The kindergarten children sometimes play in pipes and pretend they are horses," Katrina said. "The sixth-grade children play in the boat and pretend they are

Bipartisan Roasting Served Up At Annual Gridiron Dinner

Fishwheel, Alaska, scene of the latest gold strike, becama headquarters for a Republican Party gold rush here at the annual winter dinner of the Gridiron Club at the Statler Hotel last night.

GOP National Chairman Guy G. Gabrielson, as impersonated by the club for the entertainment of Vice President Alben W. Barkley and 500 other guests, reorganized the Grand Old Party as the Fishwheel Gold Mining, Treasure Seeking and Vote Hunting Expedition.

"I want peace and harmony in our ranks," Gabrielson besought the Gridiron Club members who impersonated potential Republican presidential candidates and congressional leaders.

The Truman Administration, the Pentagon and Britain's Socialist government shared the club's searing grill with the GOP, junketing Congressmen and the sons of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, James and Franklin, jr.

Barkley, back in Washington for the occasion, spoke for the Administration in the absence of President Truman, who is on vacation in Florida. The Vice President's good humor salved the burns of his colleagues in both parties.

Henry Ford 2d, young president of the Ford Motor Co., talked of the problems business has in getting along with a Democratic administration. By tradition dating back nearly 64 years, "reporters are never present" at the dinners. So what the speakers said at the Statler was off-the-record.

The dinner was opened with the classic "speech in the dark," delivered by Richard L. Wilson, Gridiron Club president for 1949, and chief of the Washington bureau of the Des Moines Register and Tribune and the Minneapolis Star and Tribune.

At the club's annual meeting during the day, Thomas L. Stokes, United Features Syndicate columnist, was elected president for 1950, and James T. Berryman, cartoonist for the Washington Star, vice president.

The following officers were reelected: Paul R. Leach of the Chicago Daily News, secretary; Walker S. Buel of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, treasurer, and Lewis Wood, of the New York Times, historian.

President-elect Stokes appointed James L. Wright, Buffalo Evening News; James Russell Wiggins, Washington Post, and Benjamin M. McKelway, Washington Star, members of the executive committee for 1950.

Chiang Flees To Formosa; Leaves Chaos

Revolt in Yunnan Strips Nationalist Armies of Last China Footholds

Taipeh, Formosa, Dec. 10 (AP).—Chiang Kai-shek flew to Formosa tonight from the chaotic mainland, where a Yunnan Province revolt was stripping the Nationalists of their last major footholds.

Large-scale organized resistance on the mainland is ending. A new era of Nationalist guerilla warfare is at hand.

Today's developments apparently marked the end of organized warfare in China after 22 years.

Chiang laid his plans for guerilla warfare before he left Chengtu. When he left, Chengtu streets were filled with soldiers of Gen. Hu Tsung-nan's 350,000-man army. They were withdrawing to the mountains beyond, there to take up the burden of guerilla warfare in western China.

The headquarters for the Nationalist operation will be Sichang, in mountainous Sikang province, 200 miles southwest of Chengtu.

Some of the soldiers rode in trucks, but for the rest it was a weary, plodding march.

The Communists were behind them.

(The United Press reported from Hongkong that the fall of Chengtu was expected momentarily. Late dispatches said Nationalist troops were evacuating the city as Communist armies hammered at the outskirts.

(Other press accounts in Hongkong said Communist forces in South China had begun an attack on Gen. Pai Chung-hsi's armies on Luichow Peninsula. The peninsula leads to Hainan Island, headquarters for the Nationalists' South China command.)

Authorities seemed confident they could hold Formosa from three to six months without United States aid.

French to Block Troops At Indo-China Border

Paris, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—The French high commissioner of Indo-China, Leon Pignon, said in Saigon today French and Viet Nam troops have been ordered to round up any Chinese soldiers attempting to cross the border into Indo-China, press dispatches reported.

"In no case will the French and Viet Nam governments admit that the territory of Viet Nam or of any other state of the French Union serves as a refuge for elements which could affect the security of the frontier regions or the good neighbor relations with neighboring states," he said.

Shots Fired at Americans As Plane Leaves Kunming

Hongkong, Dec. 10 (AP).—South China's Yunnan province went over to the Reds today and apparently the only shots fired were aimed at a plane carrying Americans from Kunming, the capital.

The plane, a Skymaster under lease to Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault's Civil Air Transport, was struck by one bullet but the 57 passengers aboard were unhurt.

A second plane with 20 passengers got away without any trouble. Both landed at Hongkong. A third plane, bearing United States Consul Larue Lutkins, is due at Hainan Island off the south coast today or Sunday, the CAT announced.

The revolt came with dramatic

U. N. Session Adjourns With Russia Charging U. S., Britain Plot War

Assembly Votes $8,000,000 Fund For Trusteeship Of Jerusalem

By Peter Kihss

New York, Dec. 10 (NYHT). With the Soviet Union bitterly proclaiming that the United States and Britain had "worked out strategic plans of aggression against peace-loving states" in an alleged plot for new war, the United Nations General Assembly ended its fourth annual session at Flushing Meadow at 1:22 p. m. today.

The outburst came from Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister A. Malik. He spoke just after Secretary General Trygve Lie had declared the U. N. had moved to a point where it could hope for "real negotiations" among the great powers, aided by smaller nations.

Sir Alexander Cadogan of Britain, following Malik to the rostrum, said that despite Lie's appeal, the Soviet Union had injected "rather unnecessarily a certain amount of poison." A great burst of applause greeted Sir Alexander's declaration.

$8,000,000 For Jerusalem

In its closing hours, the Assembly:

1. Appropriated eight million dollars to carry out the plan voted Friday night for internationalization of Jerusalem under the U. N. Trusteeship Council, as administering authority, and decided to let the council meet in Geneva next month on the problem. Charles Malik of Lebanon suggested Geneva might be more "conducive" to results on the issue than New York.

2. Approved a budget of $49,641,773 for 1950, up $6,437,693 from the $43,204,080 actually spent this year. The Jerusalem appropriation wiped out previous cuts and caused a record-breaking budget. The budget does not include three programs for which the Assembly has asked voluntary gifts by member nations—namely, a Palestine refugee work and relief program, set for $33,700,000 in 1950; an expanded technical assistance program, which may raise 15 million dollars to 25 million dollars, and the International Children's Emergency Fund, which hopes for some 50 million dollars, if other nations' matching gifts release 38 million dollars in American offers.

3. Elected Adrian Pelt of the Netherlands, now U. N. Assistant Secretary General, as U. N. Commissioner to assist the former

U. S. Plans to Keep Okinawa As Major Far East Bastion

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Okinawa, scene of one of the bloodiest battles of the Pacific war, will become the major American bastion against communism in the Far East.

The United States Government, it is learned, has decided definitely to retain control of the strategic island either permanently or indefinitely, after the occupation of Japan ends, and rebuild it into an important military base.

Rehabilitation and modernization of the key outpost will begin immediately, under a 48 million dollar appropriation voted in the closing hours of the last session. The money was approved in the adjournment rush almost without notice under the general impression it was to replace housing wrecked in a recent hurricane.

While some of the funds will repair storm damage, actually the construction represents the first increment of a program to build Okinawa into a sizable advance base, The Washington Post is reliably informed.

The substantial military installatons there—built in 1945 for the aerial assault and invasion of the Japanese homeland—largely have been left to rot since VJ-Day. Under the new program, permanent-type construction is planned. Projects include improving the harbor at Naha for

Labor Ousted In Australia After 8 Years

Conservatives Pledged To End State Control, Back Free Enterprise

Sydney, Australia (Sunday) Dec. 11 (U.P.).—Australia's 8-year-old Labor government was swept from power today by an opposition coalition pledged to outlaw communism, abolish state control and return the country to free enterprise.

Defeat of the British-type Socialist government came less than two weeks after neighboring New Zealand's 14-year-old Socialist government was thrown out of office. It left the United Kingdom the only remaining Labor stronghold in the British Commonwealth.

On the basis of almost-complete returns from yesterday's election, a Liberal and Country Party combination early today claimed a maximum of 68 seats of 123 in the House of Representatives, and said they were certain of 65.

This would give the Conservative opposition a clear majority of from 9 to 15 seats, since two of the seats—from Darwin and Canberra—only have limited voting power.

Liberal Leader Robert G. Menzies, who is certain to be the new Prime Minister, told the nation "it looks like a great victory."

He expressed a "feeling of thankfulness for the delivery of Australia."

Indonesian Army Moves in to Take Batavia Control

Batavia, Java, Dec. 10 (AP).—Advance units of the Indonesian republic's army moved into Batavia today to take over maintenance of law and order from the Dutch when this city becomes the capital of an independent Indonesia.

Plans call for the republican army to take charge here December 15. The provisional constitution for the new United States of Indonesia is to be signed by the constituent states December 14, and the first president is to be elected December 17. The Netherlands government is scheduled to hand over sovereignty at a ceremony December 27.

Heavy Water Sent Russia, Probers Say

House Group Asks Chemical Warfare Service for Records

By The Associated Press

Congressional probers disclosed yesterday they have asked for records of the Chemical Warfare Service as they sought to run down the whole story of how the Russians were able to get atomic materials during the war.

Louis J. Russell, chief investigator for the House Un-American Activities Committee, said he sought to learn whether the Russians got any of the supplies through the chemical service. The committee has learned that shipments went to the Soviet Union in 1943 when the countries were allied against Hitler.

"We know," said Russell, "that the Russians communicated with the armed forces about uranium supplies. They might have obtained the heavy water through them."

Shipping License Found

This referred to 1000 grams of an atomic experimental material which the committee said was referred to in old Lend-Lease records. The shipping license was recorded in the last quarter of 1943. The committee regards this as proof the Russians got it but wants to find out for sure.

Russell said the Chemical Warfare Service records are restricted and may not be available to the committee.

That the Russians got some uranium and related atomic materials in 1943 was clearly established last week as the committee dived into charges aired by radio commentator Fulton Lewis, jr., and former Air Force Major George Racey Jordan.

But who enabled the Russians to get the material remained a questionmark after committee questioning of Jordan and Lieut. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, wartime head of the Manhattan Engineering District.

Jordan said on a Lewis program that the late Harry Hopkins, one-time top adviser to Franklin D. Roosevelt, was the man the Russians contacted when they wanted shipments to Russia expedited.

Lewis followed through with another broadcast, asserting that Henry A. Wallace, wartime Vice President, was the man who put the pressure where it was needed to get atomic supplies for Russia.

General Groves told the committee neither Hopkins nor Wallace had pressured him.

After hearing both Groves and Jordan, Acting Committee Chairman Walter (D., Pa.) told newsmen:

"It seems to me that anyone who

Beret Maker Protests Inroads From Czech Firm He Owned

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

American, French and Czechoslovakian manufacturers have thrown their hats, berets that is, in the ring for a showdown battle for this country's trade in woolen Basque berets.

An ironic sidelight of the now bitter battle for the American beret market is that the present American beret maker, a native of Czechoslovakia and former resident of France, is being battered with competition from a Czech beret factory he and his family formerly controlled.

Their control was ended by nationalization of the factory by the Communist government of Czechoslovakia. No payment was made. Now the American maker protests bitterly that Czech berets are being sold here at prices far below his own cost of production, while the same articles are rationed and sold at higher prices in Czechoslovakia.

The domestic firm is American Basque Berets, Inc., of New York City, founded and headed by Herbert Zucker. The problem of the firm's competition from imports from abroad has been placed before Federal agencies in Washington, including the Tariff Commission, Treasury Department and State Department. The firm reported that to the best of its knowledge it is the only domestic maker of Basque berets.

Zucker came to this country in

Chief Justice Of Arizona Court Captures Suspect

Phoenix, Ariz., Dec. 10 (U.P.)—The 54-year-old chief justice of the Arizona Supreme Court overpowered a 180-pound, 25-year-old oil worker suspected of rifling a Supreme Court office today.

Chief Justice Arthur T. LaPrade received a bloody nose, scraped knuckles and torn clothing before cornering the suspect after a wild chase through two floors of the Capitol.

LaPrade caught him on the ground floor, but the man broke away. The jurist caught up with him again in a parking lot and held on until police arrived. The man was identified as Oscar Stanford, jr., 25, of Amarillo, Tex.

1 of 2 ECA Men Held In Red Korea Reported Freed

Seoul, Korea, Dec. 11 (Sunday) (AP). — One of two American officials held in Communist North Korea nearly seven weeks was reported released today.

Defense Minister Sihn Sung-mo said a Korean outpost at Yoyan reported the liberated Americans crossed the boundary between North and South Korea at 12:24 p. m. (10 p. m., Saturday, EST).

The message did not say whether it was Alfred T. Meschter, 28, of Kinderhook, N. Y., or Albert E. Willis, 40, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Arrangement had been made to deliver both men, employes of the Economic Cooperation Administration, to an official United States party at 11 a. m. today. There was no explanation for the report that only one was released.

Bipartisan Roasting Served Up at Gridiron Dinner

into the club in a skit congratulating Robert Lincoln O'Brien, veteran Washington and New England newspaperman, on the fiftieth anniversary of his initiation.

Among distinguished guests who enjoyed the impartial roasting of all parties, departments and nations, were the Chief Justice of the United States, Fred M. Vinson; Associate Justices Hugo L. Black, Stanley F. Reed, Felix Frankfurter, Robert H. Jackson, Harold M. Burton, Tom C. Clark and Sherman Minton.

Through a jesting skit, Walker S. Buel of the Cleveland Plain Dealer and Lyle C. Wilson of United Press called attention to some of the celebrities present.

$100 for All

Wilson said that "the next session of Congress will consider $100 a month pensions for everybody" and that "we have here a room full of needy people. Let's ask some of them what they think about pensions."

How about the Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, president of Notre Dame University?

Said Buel: "Father Cavanaugh says—sure pensions are fine, but after last Saturday NOT a dime for the Southern Methodists."

How about Herbert Brownell and John D. M. Hamilton?

"The former chairman of the Republican National Committee—they're eligible," said said Buel.

And Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan?

"Mr. Brannan," said Wilson, "says he has a better plan than pensions—it is called perpetual motion."

John L. Lewis?

"Mr. Lewis is an expert on pensions—he's got a system that's gone broke already," said Buel.

The Ambassador of Norway, dean of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington, was present as well as the Ambassadors of France, Iran, the Philippines, Canada and Great Britain. Every member of the Cabinet attended, as well as service chiefs and congressional leaders.

Labor, "Interests" Roasted

The dinner entertainment opened on a theme that roasted both organized labor and the special interests simultaneously. The curtain rose on a chorus in two groups, one clad in white tie and tails and the other in overalls and denim caps. The formally-dressed "special interests" sang to the tune of "Winter Wonderland:

*"Profits high, make 'em higher
Dividends our desire
We shout beware of
But we want our share of Spending in this welfare wonderland."*

And the overalled choristers representing labor responded:

*"Pensions high, make 'em higher
One more boost our desire
Taft-Hartley's a myth
Cannot interfere with Striking in this welfare wonderland."*

Then, together, the two groups sang this verse and chorus:

*"In the White House we can count on Truman
Though he bawls us out in each campaign.
He intends to see that every human
Votes for him in fifty-two again.
"Later on, we'll arrange it
So that they'll never change it.
Fair Deal's here to stay
Call it what you may.
"We'll live and die in Welfare Wonderland."*

Me-too-ism in the Republican Party broke out like the measles at the opening of the GOP Forty-Niners skit, with even its arch-enemy Chairman Gabrielson catching them after Harold Stassen recommended that the party ought to "get a big gold poke and go out and poke those sourdough Democrats."

The party leaders, costumed for a gold rush, gathered at Fishwheel House, forlorn with disappointment at seeing the GOP's November 8, 1948, claim peter out. Chairman Gabrielson called for a report from Sinclair Weeks, chairman of the GOP finance committee, and Weeks sang:

*"Dollars are not dropping
In the Grand Old Party's bank,
And the checks we're getting, they are mostly blank!
No money in the till.
Democrats have all the dough!
And our plaintive wail for assistance
Brings us nothing' but a tale of woe!
Oh the day of Penrose, Knox and Quay,
And of Hanna, too, those days are far away.
Taxes pay the Democratic bill,
But for us—nothin' in the till!"*

The Gridiron Chorus interpolated a wail of woe into the song, but Senator Owen Brewster objected that "there's something else we haven't got besides money," and Representative Halleck of Indiana replied that unless the party had that necessity, "all the gold the Democrats may have left in Fort Knox" wouldn't help.

The GOP stalwarts called on Gabrielson to summon the party to new effort by a blast on the Fishwheel moose horn. But the Gridiron soloist who impersonated Senator Kenneth Wherry of Nebraska, left some doubt about party enthusiasm by the way he pronounced "blow," as he sang:

"Blow, Gabrielson, blow,
Go on and blow, Gabrielson, blow!
We've been a-losin' in every fight,
But now we're lookin' to you for light
So blow, Gabrielson, blow!

Blows Two Blasts

Nevertheless, Gabrielson blew two blasts on the Fishwheel horn, and in response to this summons, a masked bandit rode up, pulling his horse to a stand with the words: "Whoa, whoa, Columbia."

"I have heard your call of distress," the masked bandit told the GOP assemblage. "I have come to rescue you, I think. I still have a certain academic doubt about it." And then the masked figure, revealed as General of the Army and Columbia University President Dwight D. Eisenhower sang:

*"Some enchanted evening,
You may see a stranger,
You may see a stranger
Across a smoke-filled room;
And somehow you know,
You know even then
That often you'll see him again and again.
Some enchanted evening
I will pick a party,
You may hear me speaking
Across a smoke-filled room.
And night after night, as strange as it seems,
The sound of my speaking will answer your dreams.
None can explain it in the GOP.
They give strange reasons why you may want me."*

The Gridiron Chorus joined the soloist in a reprise of the second chorus of the song to close the skit singing:

*"Some enchanted evening
If you find no other,
If I hear you call me
Across a smoke-filled room,
I'll fly to your side
And make you my own,
Or all through you life, you may vote all alone!
Once you have have found me, hour after hour,
Say to the nation,
"VOTE FOR EISENHOWER!"*

One of the star skits of the evening showed two sign painters, both hard at work on a billboard portrait of the famous Bull Durham bull, bearing in huge letters the words: THE SAME OLD BULL!

The painters identified themselves as James and Franklin Roosevelt. James accused Franklin of arguing with him, but Franklin declared he hadn't said a word.

The Gridiron Club paid its respects to the Nation's foreign affairs with a skit depicting Great Britain's first nationalized Christmas, in which the immortal Santa was replaced by Attlee Claus, and the day's hallowed name became Merry Cripps-mas. It was all the dream of Secretary of State Dean Acheson during a Christmas Eve nap.

After mutual congratulations on nationalization of the day, Gridiron members impersonating Prime Minister Clement Attlee and Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Cripps grudgingly agreed on adding two lumps of coal to their hearth fire at No. 10 Downing st., London.

"That ought to be enough reason for another advance from that tightwad, Paul Hoffman," Sir Stafford declared.

To the tune of "Here Comes Santa Claus," Anthony Eden led a Christmas glee:

*"Here comes Attlee Claus, here comes Attlee Claus,
The Welfare State's big brain,
He's got a bag of socialist tricks
That will set us right again.
Hear those dollars jingle jangle.
I hope I'm hearing right.
Hang your stocking if you have one
For Attlee pays off tonight."*

But from Winston Churchill, Conservative leader, this drew a "Bah, bah, bah!" And Britain's wartime leader sang in high dugeon to the tune of "All I Want for Christmas Is Some New Front Teeth:"

*"All you get for Christmas is some new false teeth,
Some NEW false teeth;
What, you can't use teeth?
Well, then, how'd you like to have a nice toupee
To make a merry Stafford Cripps-mas?
It seems so long since I could say,
'You want ear-rings, dearie? Here's a nice pair'
All I have to give away, is stuff for your welfare!
All you get for Christmas is some pills for free,
Or dentistry
And Bankruptcy
Gee, if you could use an appendectomy
Then you could have a merry Cripps-mas!"*

The Gridiron Club took its guests to Paris for an interlude with Congressmen busy investigating conditions on the Left Bank and at the Folies Bergere. Senator Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) and A. Willis Robertson (D., Va.) entered a sidewalk cafe with Representatives Wayne L. Hays (D., Ohio) and James P. Richards (D., S. C.).

Senator Thomas, addressing the waiter, disclosed his identity and introduced his colleagues. "We're investigating," said he, and warned: "No more Swedish massage or look out Marshall Plan." The waiter got a message for the the Congressmen announcing a quorum call.

Representative Richards said he had to hold three press conferences, one to reveal the loss of his pants, a second to announce their return, and a third to deny everything.

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) entered in a bull-fighter's costume to beg his colleagues to come back to Spain with him and visit "a very, very close and wonderful friend, Francisco Franco."

A member of the Navy's now-disbanded Operation 23, and Capt. John G. Crommelin, who figured in the recent unification disputes, were cleaning up a South Sea island for Admiral Denfeld's arrival when a native demanded Captain Crommelin identify himself. Captain Crommelin sang to the tune of "Hair of Gold:"

*"Oh, stripes of gold, suit of blue,
I'm a Navy man.
In oceans grim or corridors dim
You can call me Fancy Dan."*

He had no more than finished when a B-36 roared in with Defense Secretary Johnson, Navy Secretary Matthews, Air Force Secretary Symington, and Air Force Chief of Staff Vandenberg. Contention burst out immediately as General Vandenberg sang (to the music of "Riders in the Sky"):

*"We're from the mighty Air Force
Not the Navy or Marines.
Our generals are vet'rans when They're just beyond their 'teens.
Despite our suits of baby blue
We're no tribe of pixies.
It takes hairy-chested guys
To fly B-Thirty Sizes
Yip-pi-yi-ay! Yip-pi-yi-oh!
Bomb riders in the sky.
There's only one blue youder
Which we don't intend to share
We're gonna keep the Russians and
The Navy out of there.
We're pretty rough, we rarely bluff,
We've a mortgage on the skies.
The motto of the Air Force is
"It pays to advertise"
Yip-pi-yi-ay! Yip-pi-yi-oh!
Ghost writers in the sky."*

Secretaries Symington and Matthews thought the island an awful spot, but Secretary Johnson said "What does it matter? You're with me, aren't you?" The whole company, from blue jackets to high brass, responded with a brisk "Yes, sir," to which Secretary Johnson truculently replied: "You'd better be with me."

Then, to the tune of "A Wonderful Guy," he sang:

*All by myself I am the whole Army
I'm the Navy and Air Force too
I nod my head and the Congress plays dead
And I now have the White House in view.
They won't need a convention in fifty-two
Harry S. Truman can be my V. P.
Modesty stops me from claiming I'm tops
But I'm the most wonderful guy.
I can sink a whole fleet without leaving my seat
And I don't mean canoes.
I'm dynamic and tough as a bull, sure enough,
If you don't share my views.
Louis Denfeld is just an example
Sherman, take warning and Collins look spry
If you'll obey and say "yes" every day
I can be the most wonderful guy.*

The Democratic skit that closed the dinner portrayed members of the club in the tortures of writing a skit because they reluctantly acknowledge that "we can't just ignore the Democrats." A character dressed as a gorilla wandered into the clubrooms where weary members wrestled with their problem.

"Good Lord," exclaimed the chairman of the Gridiron music committee, "it's John L. Lewis." A member tried to shoo the gorilla out as not being funny enough for the act, but desisted when another member exclaimed:

"What act? We have the same people, the same situations, year after year after year." He helped the gorilla take off the head of his costume, and committee members cheered at news the gorilla had an idea.

The gorilla suggested "somebody sing a song about Scott Lucas," Senate majority leader who had so many troubles during the session of the Eighty-first Congress.

"Barkley never had troubles like Lucas," the chairman said. "Lucky old Veep." The line struck first, and a soloist sang to the tune of "Lucky Old Sun":

*"Oh boss, oh boss, I'm tired an' achin' with pain;
Please, boss; please, boss, forgive me if I complain,
Fussin' with Russell, scrappin' with Byrd,
Fight till I'm weary and grey
But that lucky old Veep got nothin' to do
But laff at the Senate all day.
Fix up the farmers, pass Civil Rights,
Do jest what Phil Murray say,
But dat lucky ol' Veep got nothin' to do
But laff at the Senate all day.
Them Democrats pull in all directions,
Never can agree
But somehow, boss, you still win elections,
So won't you please give me—a—
Place on de ticket, jest secon' place
And wash all my troubles away
Then like lucky ol' Veep, I'll have nothin' to do
But laff at the Senate all day."*

Slight Chance Seen For '51 Budget Cut

Executive Named GOP Treasurer

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

R. DOUGLAS STUART, official of the Quaker Oats Co., has been named treasurer of the Republican National Committee, the GOP announced last night. (Story on Page 1)

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

News that President Truman's 1951 budget would demand another huge deficit or higher taxes generated no surprise here yesterday but considerable heat.

Despite the heat and oratory, it now appears 1951 will be another deficit year.

Members of Congress, generally along party lines, either demanded reductions in spending or warned against higher taxes, or both. But there appeared to be small prospect of much budget reduction by Congress or of measurably increased taxation.

The congressional outcry followed announcement at Key West, Fla., Friday by Budget Director Frank Pace that he did not see how the 1951 budget could be financed without increased taxes. He had just emerged from a conference with President Truman, who was said by some of his advisers to favor hiking taxes on corporation profits.

'A Bitter Present'

Among members of Congress who commented on the matter yesterday was Representative Reed (R., N. Y.), who said Pace had handed Americans "a bitter Christmas present." He added, however, that the news was not "wholly unexpected."

In New York, speaking before the fifty-first annual dinner of the Pennsylvania Society, Senator Martin (R., Pa.) declared the American public was trapped "in a great jungle of taxes." According to the United Press, Martin added:

"Deficit financing is like cutting off a dog's tail in order to provide him with meat. You end up by whittling away the dog . . .

"If we cut down taxes, more people will have more money to spend for automobiles, homes, household appliances and the necessities of life. That is the way real income should be increased, not by inflation through borrowed money."

Difficult Riddle

An indication of the difficulty which faces Congress in any attempt to cut expenses was provided by Senator Thye (R., Minn.). Just back from an inspection of Marshall Plan countries, Thye said that while he favored economy, he opposed the view of some of his traveling companions that it should be achieved by reducing funds for aid to Europe below whatever figures might be recommended by ECA Director Paul G. Hoffman.

"To cut off this program or to reduce it too drastically," he declared, "would be like stopping 15 feet above the water line when you are drilling a well."

Another Republican, Senator Morse of Oregon, proffered the view that the GOP should adopt the tax revision program proposed by the Committee for Economic Development. This program includes recommendations for a five-year carry forward of losses, elimination of double taxation on corporate profits, more liberal depreciation allowances, elimination of excise taxes and elimination of tax-free securities.

This program, Morse said, would eliminate "grave inequities" in the tax structure and would so stimulate business that the expense of Government could be met without new taxation.

Action Doubtful

That these protests, all from Republican circles, would lead to drastic action by Congress next year was regarded here as most doubtful.

So far, the only concrete proposal to reduce Federal spending has come from a Democrat, Senator Byrd of Virginia, who suggested that the 1951 budget be cut by Congress to 36 billion dollars. Instead, observers here said, it will more likely be four to nine billion above that figure and much nearer the budget recommended by the President.

It was pointed out that major obstacles to budget cutting lie in the fact that expenditures are called for in basic laws for which appropriations are made to carry out. Byrd, for instance, called for a $1,300,000,000 cut in the estimated three-billion-dollar veterans' benefits to be spent this year. These funds are appropriated to carry out provisions of the numerous acts of Congress affecting veterans and these acts themselves would have to be amended in order to lessen appropriations for that purpose.

The Administration is committed to various "welfare" measures, all of which will cost money.

Four Senators Get Navy Aid In Air Landing

After a "perfect" seven-weeks trip through 24 countries, four members of a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee needed the help of Navy GCA, equipment to complete their journey yesterday.

The four-engined Navy transport carrying them was brought in safely at the Naval Air Station in Memphis, Tenn., under ceiling zero conditions.

Back in Washington last night, Sen. Theodore F. Green, (D., R. I.), said the landing was so smooth "I wasn't aware there was any danger."

Scheduled originally to land at Sheveport, La., the destination of Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.), the plane was caught in a severe northwest storm and ordered to Memphis instead. It had taken off from San Francisco, Calif.

"We couldn't even see the plane until it was about 100 feet from the runway," Lieut. O. S. Burnette, Memphis public information officer, said.

Other committee members aboard the plane were Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), who returned to Washington with Senator Green and Senator William E. Jenner (R., Ind.), who continued to Indianapolis, Ind., by train. Senator Ellender left for New Orleans by auto.

Police Chief Socks Editor, Arrests Himself, Pays Fine

Macomb, Ill., Dec. 10. (U.P.).—Police chief Eddie Setser today punched the nose of an editor who criticized his force, then swore out a complaint against himself and paid a fine.

Setser said, "I guess I just blew my top," when he met Carl R. Crabb, Sr., editor of the McDonough County Weekly Times, on the street and socked him.

Crabb's newspaper had attacked the force for "lacking discretion" and for "bullying" tactics.

Setser left the editor stretched out on the pavement, went to justice of the peace Floyd Keough and signed a complaint against himself, charging assault and battery. Keough held court on the spot. Setser pleaded guilty and paid a $10 fine plus $5.40 in costs.

Crabb recovered. He said his first impulse was to get out an extra, but later changed his mind.

Truman, Pace Draw Budget Blueprint on Morning Stroll

Key West, Fla., Dec. 10 (U.P.).—President Truman and Budget Director Frank Pace literally walked through the 1951 Federal budget today.

With billions of dollars at stake, the Chief Executive and his top fiscal officer conferred—not across a desk piled with official papers but along the sidewalks and streets of the naval station here.

Mr. Truman and Pace arose early and decided that the best way to confer on the budget was in motion. They started walking through the streets of the base and after a 30-minute stroll, came back to the winter White House with a rather complete idea of what the new budget will look like.

"It was a completely casual thing," said Press Secretary Charles G. Ross. "They completed their budget discussions as far as the current Key West stay is concerned, but there will be later talks in Washington."

Ross emphasized that upon returning to the White House, Mr. Truman will consult with all members of the Cabinet, agency heads and Congressional leaders on the budget, the State of the Union message and his economic report, all of which will go to the House and Senate during the early days of Congress in January.

The President will leave here December 20 and will be in Washington only two days before leaving December 23 to spend Christmas at his home in Independence, Mo. He will return to Washington on December 28.

Pace will return to Washington Sunday.

Kostov's Aide Links Him to U. S. Envoy

Sofia, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Traicho Kostov's secretary today testified the former Bulgarian Vice Premier had contacts with United States Minister to Sofia Donald Read Heath and British officials before his arrest on charges of treason and espionage.

The secretary, Col. Emil Nedialchev, gave no details of conversations—only that Kostov had received Heath and at least one member of the British Legation here in his office.

Nedialchev was called to the stand as the trial entered its second phase, hearing of testimony from 65 witnesses. The last of the 11 defendants appeared yesterday. All but Kostov pleaded guilty to plotting against the country.

Two members of the military court that tried Kostov and 61 other Communists in 1942 said Kostov had been slated for death, but was spared at the last moment on the order of King Boris.

Nikola Chaushev, who said he shared a cell with Kustov at the time of the other trial, testified Kostov regularly received good food and newspapers while he—Chaushev—was not allowed to eat the food his mother sent him.

Several other high government officials, many of them now under arrest, blamed Kostov for Bulgaria's deteriorating economy.

Hesitant Bulgar Reds Reported in Moscow

Belgrade, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Several former top Bulgarian Communists who were arrested but refused to confess to treason are in Moscow for pretrial "treatment," a Bulgarian source said today.

This source, whom Western observers believe highly reliable, said those now in Moscow balked at the dictated confessions they were supposed to make at the trial of Traicho Kostov.

Fuss Renewed

Paris Ousts 18 Poles For Security

Paris, Dec. 10 (NYHT).—The French Government today announced expulsion of 18 Polish citizens, most of them employed in schools serving 100,000 Polish children in France.

This new move in the Franco-Polish conflict threatened to reopen a matter that has been slowly losing its urgency during the past week.

"These proceedings," the Polish Embassy here commented, "are a flagrant violation of the Franco-Polish cultural and consular conventions and appear designed to aggravate the present state of Franco-Polish relations."

This is not the French view, however, according to a spokesman for the Ministry of the Interior, the expelled Poles have been "guilty of activities damaging the security of the state, and France cannot tolerate foreign interference in French political affairs."

The Ministry said that about 12 of those expelled held membership cards in the Communist Party here, "which constitutes direct interference in French political affairs."

French Poll Shows Only 4% Think Marshall Plan Helps

Paris, Dec. 10 (AP).—Reports that the average Frenchman knows little about the Marshall Plan and dislikes what he knows were confirmed today in a poll organized by the Marshall Plan itself.

The Dutch and Norwegians know and like the plan better, the survey showed. Danes and Austrians also were checked, but the results are not yet available.

Only four Frenchmen in 100 credited the Marshall Plan as a factor in French recovery from the war and the German occupation, though the United States has given France about $1,700,000,000 in aid.

Only 38 percent of those who had heard about the plan believed it was good for France.

Thomas K. Hodges, chief of the plan's information research and analysis section here, said:

"The low percentage favoring the plan is all the more striking because, in a survey conducted approximately one year ago, the number of respondents favoring the Marshall Plan in France was 52 percent."

The answers indicated that:

Thirteen percent of Frenchmen never heard of the Marshall Plan.

Twenty-three percent felt it had good and bad sides.

Sixteen percent called it outright bad for France.

Twenty-three percent could not make up their minds.

Here are percentage figures from the Netherlands and Norway:

Question	Dutch	Norwegians
Heard of Marshall Plan	86%	94%
Know Romania is not in it	69	87
Think plan a good thing	82	67
Bad thing	—x	7

Pakistan Leader Accepts Truman Bid

The White House announced yesterday that Liaquat Ali Khan, Prime Minister of Pakistan, has accepted an invitation to visit the United States next May.

President Truman's invitation was presented yesterday by George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State, at Peshawar, capital of the northwest frontier province of the Moslem state.

Italion colony of Libya to independence by 1952. A last-minute effort by some Latin American nations seeking a commissioner more acceptable to Italy and resenting any active role for Secretariat officials, failed to upset the election. Pelt won 28 votes to 20 for Jose Arce, chief Argentine U. N. delegate, and three for Sir Mohammad Zafrullah Khan, Foreign Minister of Pakistan.

The Assembly had just started its final round of congratulatory and farewell speeches, when Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Malik rose. The Soviet Union, he said, "sees no reason for a positive appraisal" of the Assembly's work.

The Assembly majority, he said, had adopted decisions contrary to the Charter, but he said the Soviet Union would "carry on the fight for peace and international cooperation against the warmongers and the enemies of peace with even greater energy in the future."

Romulo Discards Text And Speaks From Heart

New York, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Brig. Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, president of the United Nations General Assembly, discarded his prepared speech before an assembly of young people today and made instead an impassioned plea for human beings to respect each other. He said:

"Look at me. I am a funny-looking little man. I am a Filipino, a foreigner. Perhaps all you know of the Philippines is the picture you see in the newspaper—people photographed wearing G-strings—foreigners.

"But see? I crack jokes, I wear clothes, I am a human being. Foreigners are human beings endowed with the dignity of the human soul.

"When you learn that and apply it, you will be contributing more to international peace than any diplomatic treaties.

"The basis of international peace and understanding can be found when we learn to respect the dignity of the human soul, no matter what its race or creed or color.

"We have failed in our generation—two cataclysmic wars," he said. "But that failure should not be inherited by youth. To that end we are laboring at the United Nations.

"I wish you could see those 59 'foreigners' work together at the United Nations. There are some good actors," he smiled, "and some ham.

"But when you get to know the other fellow and his defects and learn to love him and respect him in spite of his defects—that is friendship. It is with nations as it is with people."

Ben-Gurion Says Israel, Holy City 'Inseparable'

Tel Aviv, Dec. 10 (AP).—Premier David Ben-Gurion said tonight that "no vote of the United Nations can alter the historic fact that Jerusalem is an inseparable part of Israel and her eternal capital."

The Israeli Parliament has adopted a motion refusing any foreign or international regime entry to Jerusalem, declaring the Holy City will remain a part of Israel.

In Jerusalem, Dr. Daniel Auster, mayor of the Jewish section of the city, said his government would fight "with all the means at our disposal, and if necessary with arms," any attempt to set up the international regime.

suddeness in Kunming when 40,000 Nationalist troops changed allegiance. It was believed by air crews arriving here that the rest of the province followed suit.

Gen. Lung Yun, former Yunnan governor, who was fired by Chiang Kai-shek, was believed to be behind the uprising. Lung arrived only this week in Kunming.

Garry Wong, senior Chinese CAT official, said the defection was first noticed by outsiders when General Lung ordered impounded all nine Chinese air force carrier planes at the airport.

Governor Lu Han of Yunnan, a friend of Lung, had given a farewell dinner for United States consular officials and CAT officials only yesterday.

Lu told the CAT he would straighten out any trouble they might encounter at the airfield.

At the airfield, however, it was found that Nationalist troops also had seized the three CAT planes. All personnel at the field were under guard. The soldiers wore their hats upside down to show they had changed loyalty.

Capt. F. E. Birkman, San Francisco, pilot of the Skymaster, said plane crews were confined to their rooms shortly after midnight.

"Those guys (soldiers) were taking suitcases and opening them on the pretense of searching them," he related.

Later the soldiers released the three CAT planes.

Australians Defeat Labor Government

ley has not yet formally conceded. But he issued a "statement of thanks" to voters, which was interpreted by some observers as a virtual concession.

Political observers said the Conservatives' majority would be "small but workable" in the House.

The only snag was in the Senate, where the Labor Party, as expected, apparently was assured of 33 of 60 seats.

A. W. Fadden, whose Country Party teamed with the Liberals in the election, said Labor was defeated because of:

1. Australia's discontent with socialization.
2. Its fear of "socialism's twin brother—communism."
3. Their impatience with Chifley's "stubbornness" in refusing to lift gasoline rationing.

Election Raises Hopes Of Tories in Britain

London, Dec. 10 (NYHT).—The Conservative Party took new heart tonight when results of the Australian election became known. Lord Woolton, party chairman, said Britain "will come to the same conclusions (as Australia) as soon as the people have a chance to choose the way of life they want."

One firm of bookmakers changed its quotations on Britain's 1950 general election. Labor previously a 7-to-4 favorite, now is quoted at 6 to 4, while the Conservatives, who were 6 to 4, are now 5 to 4.

Lord Woolton said "the Liberal and Country Party (combination) in Australia is the counterpart of the Conservative and National Liberal Parties in this country. In both Australia and New Zealand, the young countries of the world, they have tried socialism and found it out.

"They now know from experience that it just does not bring contentment and a higher standard of living. It fails in the end."

heard both of these witnesses must reach the conclusion that Major Jordan's story is highly improbable."

Republican committee members, out of town at the time and unable to attend the sessions because, they said, they weren't given sufficient notice, hinted that the Democrats were trying to "whitewash" the former New Deal officials.

They want Groves and Jordan recalled, but they may not get their wish.

The committee sessions had to be called hurriedly, Democrats said, because the case developed hurriedly and without warning.

The investigating staff say they want to question a top official of a Canadian company that supplied uranium compounds to Russia. They also want to see the company's record. Investigators went to Canada several days ago.

So far, the committee says it actually knows of only three atomic shipments to Russia, all in 1943. These included 420 pounds of uranium nitrate and oxide, 1000 pounds of the same compounds, and several pounds of impure uranium metal.

The State Department has disclosed that export licenses for uranium compound shipments to Russia were approved by Groves' Manhattan District in March and April, 1943.

The heavy water license was granted in November, 1943.

The Canadian government has disclosed that 1000 pounds of uranium oxide and nitrate were sold to the Russians in May, 1943, through normal trade channels. This was flown out of Great Falls.

Groves said he knew about the first shipment of 420 pounds of nitrate and oxide. He said he approved it because not to have done so might have tipped off the Russians that the United States had found a new use for the material and wanted none of it to leave this country. So far as he knew, he said, only 2 pounds of uranium metal got to the Russians "and that wasn't the kind we were trying to get."

The Soviets might have obtained some heavy water, he said, but he doubts it because the water just wasn't available in essential quantities.

U. S. Plans to Keep Okinawa as Major Bastion in Western Pacific larger ships, building of storage facilites for jet aircraft fuel, aircraft shops, sewerage and water systems and asphalt roads.

The plan provides for all three services to have forces and facilities at Okinawa. The Navy withdrew many months ago, except for one very small unit.

Only 'How' Undecided

Under the decision to build up Okinawa, the United States will insist on separate consideration of the Ryukyus—790-mile chain of islands ranging from the Jap homeland to Formosa—from the rest of occupied Japan in any peace treaty. Okinawa—embracing 485 square miles—is the only sizable island of the group.

The State Department is not ready to announce the decision on Okinawa. Officially, State and Department of Defense will say only that its future status still is undecided. What is unsettled, however, is how and not whether the island's vital airfields will remain under the American flag.

For the question of the form in which American control is retained is one for international negotiation. It could be by outright annexation, a United Nations strategic trusteeship or long-term lease of vital areas from Japan.

That the United States intends to stay was made evident in an unpublished statement submitted by the Department of Air Force to the House Armed Services Committee to justify building permanent-type installations there. Congressional policy bans permanent construction where the future status of a base is doubtful. The Army Department has explained its plea for permanent building on the ground they had to be typhoon-resistant, but the Air Force said:

"Okinawa is considered a firm USAF installation that will be continued in use indefinitely. Although United States rights to Okinawa have not been clearly defined it is expected that our tenure there will be of long duration."

Advantages Over Formosa

Decision to retain and rebuilt the wartime base will assure the Nation of a strong outpost in the Western Pacific after the Japanese occupation ends, regardless of what happens to Formosa—now very much in the news. Officials here expect the latter island—now the capital of Nationalist China—to fall to the Chinese Communists. There has been agitation from some in the Government for the United States to occupy Formosa to prevent this.

Opposition to the Formosa proposal in the State Department and at the Pentagon rests on the fact that Okinawa will serve just as well as a base in friendly American hands—and with much fewer legal, political and economic headaches.

The strategic importance of either island is obvious. Bombers based on Okinawa's 26 or Formosa's six airfields—supported from American airdromes in the Philippines—could dominate the air over much of China and reach into Siberia and even Russia proper.

Present Strength Secret.

Enemy air bases on Formosa could complicate or even prevent such operations, but so could strong airpower based on the Chinese mainland.

Information as to Army and Air Force strength on Okinawa now is classified. Last summer, however, the USAF said that two major air bases were in active commission—one having fighters, including F-80 jet Shooting Stars and the other long-range reconnaissance planes. Twentieth Air Force headquarters, under Maj. Gen. Alvan C. Kincaid, is at Kadena Air Base.

A year ago, the Army said an infantry regiment and antiaircraft artillery group of Philippine Scouts, plus service troops, were stationed on Okinawa. A recent news dispatch from the island said that more than 15,000 men made up the Army-Air Force garrison.

The money appropriated for rebuilding Okinawa is expected to go much further than in comparable construction in Alaska and other Pacific islands. Local labor is available, and reinforced concrete construction is planned. To withstand typhoons, one-story buildings will prevail, with concrete floors, walls and ceilings tied together by steel bars.

In contrast to Formosa's teeming pro-Communist millions Okinawa has a native population of 550,000 (with another 350,000 in the rest of the Ryukyus) that are generally loyal, hard-working and without political consciousness.

Due to neglect of Okinawa since the war, the native standard of living is even lower now than under the Japs. The Ryukyus never were self-sufficient, having had to import much of their food. Trade today is almost nonexistent.

Living conditions for the American garrison likewise are bad. Okinawa has been looked upon as a "Siberia" and dumping grounds for misfits. Morale is bad and the VD rate has been the highest in the Army. But under the new commanding officer, Maj. Gen. Joseph R. Sheetz, it is reported that progress is being made. Higher caliber military government personel are being sent in to help get the newly important island on its feet.

The present legal status of Okinawa is unusual. It was not included among the Pacific islands for which the United States obtained a U. N. trusteeship after the war. Nor was Okinawa included among the territories promised to China by the Cairo declaration of 1943—for the simple reason that it never was taken from China. The Cairo declaration promised that "Japan shall be stripped of all the islands in the Pacific which she has seized or occupied since the beginning of the first World War in 1914, and that all the territories Japan has stolen from the Chinese, such as Manchuria, Formosa and the Pescadores shall be restored to the Republic of China."

The Cairo declaration added that "Japan will also be expelled from all other territories which she has taken by violence and greed," but this hardly applies to Okinawa. The Ryukyus had their own native kings and native government for hundreds of years.

Early in the seventeenth century they became a kind of Japanese protectorate, but kept their native rulers until 1879, when Japan made the islands a department of Japan itself.

Okinawa, therefore, is an American-occupied area, quite like Japan proper, although administered separately and directly under the Army instead of the Emperor.

Its future legal status will have to be determined by the peace treaty with Japan. The State Department is now working out a draft of what it thinks such a treaty should contain.

President Roosevelt and President Truman have said repeatedly that the United States sought no annexations out of the recent war. Theoretically the best way for the United States to keep its military control without annexation would be to get a "strategic trusteeship" from the United Nations.

But the catch is that strategic trusteeships can only be granted by the Security Council—on which Russia has a veto.

Another course would be to return Okinawa as a territory to Japan, but to keep permanent military bases there. This might relieve the United States of some of the burden of feeding and supporting the half-million people of the island. But the necessary military installations are so big that they might take up most or all of the island.

So the alternatives would seem to be: (1) outright annexation as a U. S. territory, comparable to the Virgin Islands in the Caribbean; (2) applying for a strategic trusteeship under the U. N., which seems a futile gesture; (3) returning the island to Japan under guarantees and with the right to have permanent U. S. bases there.

Ward Called Victim Of Reds' Strategy

(Upheaval in China is "Country Seizing City," William Lewisohn writes on Page 3, Section II.)

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

Consul General Angus Ward, en route home today from Communist China after a year of forced isolation, was the innocent victim of studied strategy.

The Chinese Communists needed a single issue by which they could delay U. S. recognition of their new regime and thus split this country and Britain.

Rigged charges against Ward were brought as the vehicle with which to accomplish this double objective.

These are the opinions of William Lewisohn, 65, veteran China correspondent of the Times of London and for 40 years a student of the Orient.

Lewisohn, who was imprisoned by the Japanese for six weeks after Pearl Harbor and then repatriated, passed through Washington this week en route home "for good."

Lewisohn was the last accredited foreign correspondent to leave Communist China headquarters in Peiping, September 30. Lewisohn knew Ward in Mukden in 1947 and knew O. E. Chubb, American consul general, in Peiping, through whom the State Department received all news from Ward during the last tense weeks.

The British correspondent left Taku Bar on October 13.

In an interview with The Washington Post Lewisohn revealed some of the first on-the-scene information about Red China.

In Peiping, the Russian embassy was having difficulty in finding accommodations for more than 300 "technicians, educationalists and political advisers," he said.

These Russians keep to themselves, he said, and can be seen only in "walking parties in Central Park" and in the "pedicles" which have all but replaced rickshaws.

Despite the documented presence of Russians in Peiping, Lewisohn said he believes Russia is not "actively intervening in China today.

"Rather, the Chinese are using the Russians, who, of course, are only too glad to help. I don't think that Russians are directing China policy. It is Chinese history not to be guided," he said.

"These Chinese don't want communism, but they couldn't be any worse off under communism than they were under Chiang Kai-shek. He is finished politically and militarily. The Chinese wouldn't have him."

When asked if there had been any raping or ravaging of cities in the present civil war, Lewisohn said simply "Not by the Communists. By the Nationalists, in every city."

Who was supplying the Chinese Communists with arms, he was asked.

"The Russians undoubtedly gave them all the equipment seized from the Japanese, but little else. The Communists had no planes until recently when some of Chiang's planes deserted. If the Russians had been serious about arming Communist China, they would surely have given planes," he said.

"When the Communists marched into Peiping, at least one third of their arms came from the United States. I personally thought it was at least one half, but persons I talked to said the ratio was less," he continued.

Lewisohn is "going back for good." He said the censorship on correspondents is complete. Although there are no personal restraints within the city, there is sharp police surveillance, and permits are required to leave the city.

Ward to Leave Tientsin Today Aboard Tug

Aboard the Lakeland Victory at Taku Bar, Dec. 10 (AP).—Chinese Communist officials today boarded this U. S. ship to supervise the evacuation from red China Sunday of the Angus Ward party.

The U. S. consul general and his staff, ordered out of Mukden by the Communists, will proceed from Tientsin down river to Taku Bar by tug.

Capt. Paul R. Sexton of the Lakeland Victory was advised that the party of 20 or more will board the tug at Tientsin at noon. It will take about 10 hours for the trip.

Two Communist quarantine and customs officials boarded the Lakeland Victory two hours after it docked.

Silver Spring Housewife Wins $6000 Quiz Prize

A 56-year-old Silver Spring housewife who had entered "most of the national contests" with fair success for the last four years has finally hit the grand first prize jackpot of $6000.

Mrs. Steinmetz

Mrs. Laura K. Steinmetz, 413 Mansfield rd., was notified early last week she had won a national contest for naming a dish made of Kitchen Craft Flour and ground beef. The winning entry was one of six she submitted.

This was her first winner, Mrs. Steinmetz said last night. But she had a good previous record. Prizes she has won in other contests include a refrigerator, two radios and small cash prizes.

Mother of three married daughters and wife of a Federal Trade Commission attorney who is away much of the time, Mrs. Steinmetz said she took up contests to while away lonely hours.

Nobel Prizes Awarded by Crown Prince

Stockholm, Sweden, Dec. 10 (AP). Seven princes and princesses of Swedish royalty rose in tribute to three commoners today at the awarding of Nobel prizes for scientific achievement.

Dr. Hideki Yukawa, first Japanese ever to win a Nobel prize, Dr. William R. Giauque, Canadian-born researcher in thermodynamics at the University of California, and Dr. Walter R. Hess, Swiss brain surgeon, stepped from a flower-decked podium to receive the prizes from the hand of Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf.

At a ceremony earlier in Oslo, Norway, Lord Boyd Orr, Scottish farmer and scientist, received the Nobel peace prize for 1949 for his work in advancing the cause of peace by advocating ways to prevent hunger.

The prizes are awarded annually from a trust fund left by the late Alfred Nobel, Swedish inventor of dynamite.

Juvenile Courts' Revision Is Urged

Richmond, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—The Virginia Advisory Legislative Council today urged a complete revision of the State's juvenile courts laws.

"One of the most obvious weaknesses in the present system appears to be the inadequacy, or often the complete absence, of the probation, detention and psychiartric services which are indispensable to the proper administration of a juvenile court," a VALC report to the Governor and the General Assembly declared.

"Most of the juvenile courts in the State are still without the services held by authorities to be indispensable to the proper functioning of a juvenile court, and as a result the present juvenile court law is being administered with striking inconsistency."

Offers Bill for Assembly

To effectively overhaul the law, the VALC, in its unanimous report, offered a bill for the 1950 General Assembly to provide:

1. A new method of appointing judges of the juvenile and domestic relations courts.

2. Establishment of a State juvenile probation system to be centralized in a new division of the State Department of Welfare and Institutions.

3. State efforts to help localities solve the problems of puvenile detention, so there will be an end to detaining boys and girls in jail.

4. Restatement of the law to eliminate the definitions of a "delinquent," "neglected" and "dependent" child and substitute instead the description "children within the purview of this law."

5. New sections relating to the jurisdiction of the courts "to safeguard the prerogative of the juvenile court to deal with children and at the same time to recognize that some children and some offenses cannot be properly handled under either our existing or proposed juvenile court system."

In prefacing its suggestions, the VALC recalled that the first juvenile court legislation was passed in 1914 and said "as long ago as 1922 it was provided that a juvenile and domestic relations court be established in every city and county in the State."

Inaugurated in 1936

The present judicial system, whereby the trial justice serves as the juvenile and domestic relations court judge in each county and the police court justice in each city not having provision for a separate judge, was inaugurated in 1936.

One of the weaknesses in the present law, the report said, is in the matter of jurisdiction. A less serious, but equally pronounced defect was found to be in the duplication, ambiguities, overlapping and inconsistencies in the statutes themselves "which have naturally resulted from a quarter of a century of piecemeal amending."

The council was directed to make a study on the advisibility of establishing a State-wide syste mof juvenile and domestic relations courts and at the same time to consider a Senate bill (175) introduced in the 1948 legislature. Among other things, this bill provided that the State be divided into 18 juvenile and domestic relations court districts. Each of the 17 courts would be a court of record.

The VALC endorsed the basic principle of the Senate bill for providing uniform and standardized juvenile and domestic relations courts throughout the State and found merit in the desirability of having a judge specially qualified for the work and able to devote full time to it.

pirates and put their captives in the dungeon."

In this playground there is a dungeon to put captives in and there is a boat, there are secret passages to hide in, an airplane, a foxhole, a fireman's pole to slide down, a spiral staircase, tunnels to crawl through, concrete ramps to go up and down.

The playground made mostly of cinder-block, was designed to give children a chance for their favorite sport-making up their own games; also to keep the smallest fry from being shoved aside by bullies.

"It eliminates the spirit of everybody for himself and the devil take the hindmost that is so apt to dominate when the youngsters fight for a chance to swing or slide," Mrs. Meyer said. "Even the good old seesaw, our most cooperative piece of playground equipment, is outdone by these ingenious contrivances."

Proudest man of all at the ceremonies must have been Samuel Snyder, of Rockville, Md., 28-year-old designer of the project, whose profession bears no kinship at all to playgrounds. He's an electronics engineer with the Navy Department's Bureau of Ordnance Guided Missile Branch. He and Mrs. Snyder, having noticed that children like to "crawl through tunnels, jump off things" and such, started the idea with some clay and a breadboard to put the model on.

Parkside's parents didn't have $10,000 to build this "creative" playground, so they built it themselves—nights and weekends.

In her speech Mrs. Meyer, who is wife of the chairman of the board of The Washington Post, set forth another significance of the project.

"This evidence of local initiative and independence," she said, "comes just at a moment when all central governments, including our own, are reaching out for more and more power over the lives of their citizens."

But, she also warned, "indiscriminate attacks on the welfare state are stupid.

"We must not fear the power of the State, because that power has been misused in many other countries," Mrs. Meyer declared. "We must use the state for all functions which it can perform more effectively than the private citizen.

"At the same time we must prevent the intrusion of the Federal Government in all matters that can be accomplished far better under local government control and voluntary effort.

"The welfare of the people is not a monopoly of the socialist state. It is the chief goal of democracy. But we want that welfare achieved by democratic methods. And the more responsibilities we surrender voluntarily to the state, the more we must balance public responsibility with efficiency in the realm of local and private responsibility."

Urging the need of "Federal aid to raise educational standards in some circumstances," Mrs. Meyer added: "The more Federal aid the localities need, the more we must safeguard the local control of education."

Stores to Stay Open, Safeway Announces

An all-day mediation session yesterday between the Safeway Stores and AFL butchers apparently brought progress toward an agreement as the company announced its stores will not be shut down in the dispute.

A deadlock in negotiations for a new work contract between Safeway and Local 555, Meat Cutters Union, had resulted in a company threat to close its stores here by Monday unless the union would guarantee not to pull a "quickie" strike.

Toward the end of yesterday's fourth mediation session, called by Federal Conciliator James Holden, Frank J. Sheehan, Safeway labor relations director here, said the company hopes the current negotiations will result in a "mutually satisfactory agreement with no cessation of work."

Though he declined to elaborate, he said in the light of the negotiations, Safeway "can now assure the public of continuing operation of its stores."

Another negotiating session will be held Monday, Conciliator Holden said.

The union, which represents 600 butchers, previously turned down a company offer to increase pay by 6 cents an hour. Local 555 has asked for a larger pay increase and reduction of the present 45-hour week.

The work contract expired December 3.

Dodge Hotel Service Workers Authorize Strike

Dodge Hotel service and food employes have voted to authorize a strike, if necessary, to obtain impoved wages and working conditions, the joint executive board of the AFL Hotel and Restaurant Employes, announced yesterday.

Samuel Levine, attorney for the union, said that the union would seek the intervention of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service before putting the strike into effect. He said the hotel and union are in a complete deadlock over contract negotiations.

Outdated Markets Held Doubling Cost of Food

A congressional committee yesterday said the cost of moving fresh groceries through terminal markets accounts for nearly a nickel of every dime the city housewife spends for them.

Not only that, many markets are outdated, inefficient and so poorly built that food spoils and has to be thrown away.

Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D., N. C.) of the House Agriculture Committee estimated the cost of operating the markets runs into millions, all of which comes from the consumers' pockets.

The situation was described in a preliminary report from Representative George M. Grant (D., Ala.), chairman of a subcommittee that has investigated wholesale food markets in New York, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Kansas City and New Orleans.

Grant did not condemn all of the markets. The one at Kansas City, he said, is "an example of the better" type. But even this 10-year-old market, he said, has drawbacks that add to food costs, such as poor location for truck facilities.

New York, Grant reported, "is served by what are probably the most antiquated, crowed and inefficient marketing facilities in the United States." Terminals for perishable foods destined for New York are in Jersey City, across the Hudson River.

Grant said experts figure it costs just as much to get vegetables, poultry and fruit across the Hudson as it does to buy them from the farmer and get them to Jersey City.

The subcommittee plans a final report as a basis for proposed legislation, probably some form of Federal aid toward building new and better markets.

Occupied Area Cultural Lag Is Deplored

Cultural and spiritual recovery is lagging behind the economic comeback in occupied Germany, Austria and Japan, in the opinion of delegates to the National Conference on the Occupied Countries.

The conference, in closing a two-day meeting yesterday at the Hotel Washington, heard Clarence Pickett of the American Friends Service Committee declare that to be the general feeling of the delegates.

In summarizing the conference, Pickett said there also is too much distrust between the government and the various private agencies working in cultural and educational fields in the three war-torn nations. He called for elimination of "our own manifestations of superiority" and for the establishment of an American-German Institute in the near future.

Read Named Director

The conference also heard an announcement of the appointment of Dr. James Morgan Read, foreign service secretary of the Friends Committee, as the new director of education and cultural relations in German High Commissioner John J. McCloy's office. Read, 41, was a conscientious objector during the war, serving in a noncombat unit.

His appointment was announced by Henry A. Byroade, director of the State Department's German Affairs Bureau. Byroade called for support of Germany's "better elements" and an end of that nation's "long-enforced isolation." He said the "participation of a democratic Germany in the collective life of Europe" is "one of the greatest safeguards of peace and security for all."

Must Teach Irreverence

The delegates heard Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary declare we must teach the Germans and Japanese "to be irreverent to government." He said total victory has "obsessed the vanquished with self-pity" and the cold war has tempted Germans "with the confusions and illusions" of German unity.

The conference was sponsored by the American Council on Education's Commission on the Occupied Areas with the State Department's cooperation.

D. C. to Drink To 1950 in '49—Or Else

New Year's Eve revelers will have to do all their public drinking in the District before midnight this year.

Request by the Restaurant Beverage Association to keep their bars open later got a short, firm answer yesterday from Alan W. Payne, chairman of the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

"It can't be done without an Act of Congress," said Payne. And since Congress isn't due to come back till January 3, that seemed to settle it.

The District ABC law provides no alcoholic beverages may be consumed in licensed establishments after midnight on Saturdays or after 2 a. m. weekdays. It specifically prohibits District officials changing these hours, Payne said.

Since the holiday eve falls on Saturday, the association had sought an extension to permit ample time for the traditional greeting to the new year.

Croome Man Held For Grand Jury in Farm Shooting

John Savoy, 60, of Croome, Md., was held for grand jury action in Upper Marlboro Police Court Friday on two charges of assault with intent to kill stemming from a shooting affray in a Croome cornfield Wednesday.

Savoy, who was held under $500 on each charge, is accused of wounding his cousin, Joseph Savoy, 38, and Leroy Quinn, 39, with a single blast of a shotgun after the men had argued about distribution of a corn crop grown on the farm. Quinn is owner of the farm on which the Savoys work as tenant farmers.

The defendant admitted firing at the two men as they were shucking corn in the field because, he contended, "they were shucking my corn." After the first blast, which struck Joseph Savoy in the face and Quinn in the shoulder, he reloaded and fired again at each man, but the second and third shots missed, Judge Alan Bowie was told.

4 Face Jury Trials In Whisky Raids

Four persons were held yesterday for jury trial on charges of keeping and selling whisky without a license after two early-morning raids.

In an elabor[illegible] home at 1513 Vermo[illegible] nw., vice squad police arrested Willie Lucas, 69, and his wife, Ruth, 43, at 2:30 a. m. Raiders, with a search warrant, entered the home after an undercover man allegedly made buys of liquor in the place. Police said a basement room was furnished with a bar, mirrors, chairs and tables. Thirty-four bottles of whisky, 16 of wine and 186 of beer were confiscated.

Lucas was charged with four counts each of keeping and selling, and his wife two each. Judge Milton S. Kronheim, jr., set bond at $500 for each, and a jury trial for January 23.

At 1344 Riggs st. nw., the vice squad men arrested John Mitchell, 49, and Mary C. Rose Wyatt, 24, each on two counts of keeping and selling whisky without a license. The detectives said they seized 26 bottles of beer, a half gallon of whisky, and a dream book. Judge Kronheim also set $500 bond each on the two, and set jury trial for January 23.

Charge Denied

Newsboy Says Woman Robbed Him

A newsboy who came to collect his bill from a customer told Municipal Court Judge Armond Scott yesterday that the customer stole $4 from him.

As a result the subscriber, Beatrice Erlene Brown, 33, of 1322 V st. nw., was held in bond for sentencing January 10, pending probation report on a petty larceny charge.

The boy, Samuel Wilson, 12, of 2221 Pomeroy ct. nw., testified that when he came to Beatrice Brown's house, she tried to borrow 50 cents from him.

When he refused, he asserted, she pushed him into a chair and took $4 from his pocket.

Beatrice Brown denied the charge and said the boy came and asked her if she wanted to play "pitty-pat," a card game. The defendant added that the lad won $1 from her.

Recalled to the stand, Samuel admitted playing cards and winning the money. "I gamble with her all the time," he said.

The boy's remark drew an injunction from the judge to "stop gambling" and the prophecy that the youthful card player was headed for "a bad end" if he continued.

Boy, 3, Cuts Mouth in Week's Oddest Accident

Last week's most unusual accident reported by the Red Cross Home Accident Survey was that of a 3-year-old boy who fell while tooting a horn, cutting the roof of his mouth.

Another 3-year-old boy cut his eyelid with the hook of a clothes hanger and a 5-year-old boy was hit in the face with a shovel by a playmate.

The service reported two home accidents were fatal and another 137 sent residents to the hospitals. The injury breakdown showed 55 falls, 14 burns, 7 accidental poisonings, an accidental discharge of firearms, 30 cuts and others.

The new reports raised the total 1949 injuries from home accidents to 5879 and deaths to 210.

Former Drug Addict Sues For Reduction of Sentence

A former drug addict, now cured, has asked District Court to force the District Parole Board to seek a reduction in his minimum 1 to 3-year sentence.

The suit was brought under Public Law 198 passed by the Eightieth Congress which says the Parole Board, if conditions justify, may request the court for such reductions.

According to the suit filed by Attorney John M. Webster in behalf of William R. Deaton, 1319 Park rd., nw., now incarcerated at Lorton Reformatory, Deaton had been given a suspended 1-to-3 year sentence and put on probation for changing a doctor's narcotics prescriptions as to secure more drugs.

But Deaton voluntarily asked the court to reinstate the sentence and commit him to the Public Health Hospital at Lexington, Ky., for treatment. The court obliged.

He was later deemed "cured" and transferred to Lorton. Now he wants to get out. His term will be up officially January 26. Deaton first took drugs on prescription to ease pain resulting from a back injury.

THE CANTERBURY: 12½-inch direct-view tube • High-performance chassis • FM radio • Plug-in for record player. $379.50

If your dealer tells you it may be three or four weeks before he can deliver the Du Mont model you want, you may feel tempted to accept a second choice; but before you do so, here is something to think about.

The reason Du Monts are hard to get is that so many other people feel, as you do, that Du Mont is the best receiver made. If you settle for something else—something you think isn't quite as good—through all the years you have it, there will be the feeling that you might be enjoying better television reception if you had only waited for the Du Mont.

The weeks will pass quickly.

The happy years through which you'll enjoy your Du Mont will be many and long. You'll be glad you waited for a Du Mont.

For normal reception areas: The Du Mont High-performance chassis. An improved version of the standard Du Mont chassis which has won such an enviable reputation.

For areas of difficult reception: Or for the very best possible reception anywhere. The Du Mont Plus-powered chassis. More tubes. More power. Special features which give greater sensitivity for distant reception, and give extra protection against interference.

Many of the models shown are also available in blond hardwood veneers. Prices do not include tax or installation.

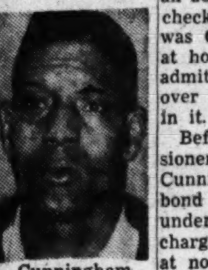
Card Player Slain, Wife Seriously Shot

A three handed card game of "pitty-pat," somewhat similar to poker, ended fatally for one participant early yesterday. A second, the dead man's wife, is in critical condition at Freedmen's Hospital, and the third player, a man, is in jail.



Cunningham

Police said the card game and shooting took place in the third-floor, rooming-house room of Melvin Morrow, 23, and his wife, Catherine, 24, at 1216 U st. nw.

The other man, Hazel Cunningham, told police he lost a dollar in the game, and wanted to quit, but was slapped for trying to get out. He left, he said, went to his home at 1008 New Jersey ave. nw., picked up a 12-shot pistol, and returned.

When the argument was resumed, police said, Cunningham shot Morrow in the abdomen, back of the head, and back of the right leg They said he shot Mrs Morrow in the abdomen and left breast.

Morrow, the officers said, staggered out of the room and tumbled down a flight of stairs to a second floor landing, where Cunningham stepped over him as he left. Morrow was found by a person seeking a room. When police arrived, they found Mrs. Morrow bleeding from her wounds.

In the Morrow room, they found an address book which they began checking. The fourth name checked was Cunningham's. He was found at home, in bed. Officers said he admitted the shooting and handed over the gun, five cartridges still in it.

Before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence, yesterday, Cunningham was held without bond on a murder charge and under $10,000 bond on an assault charge. An inquest will take place at noon, Monday.

4 Children Die In Log House Fire; Parents Escape

Elkins, W. Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—An early morning fire in a two-story log house took the lives of four children today. Trapped on the second floor of the dwelling near the Randolph County town of Mabie, about 17 miles from here, and burned to death were: Evelyn Howell, 11; Roger Howell, 4; Sandy Howell, 4, and Andrew Zirkle, 17. Rober and Sandy Howell were the nephew and niece, respectively, of Evelyn.

Mr. and Mrs. John Howell, parents of Evelyn, together with another child, escaped injury.

'Big Joe' Killed In Poolroom

JOSEPH SCHEVE

was cut in the abdomen in an argument and died five days later.

However, there is no record that Scheve, alias Henderson, was ever brought to trial on the charge. Scheve has been living recently at 4515 Longfellow st., Hyattsville, Md. A man at that address yesterday declined to comment on Scheve's death or to admit that Scheve lived there. However, neighbors said the victim resided there. He was 56.

In a signed statement to police yesterday, Rigsbee said his killing of Scheve was indirectly an outgrowth of the gaming and assault cases.

Friends Several Years

He had been friends with Scheve for several years, Rigsbee said, until three or four months ago. At that time, he said, Scheve asked him to hold Hyman Rosen, 40, of 1616 Isherwood st. ne., while Scheve beat Rosen. Rosen was convicted with Scheve on the gaming charge.

Rigsbee said he declined to do Scheve's bidding, and the latter has been extremely hostile to him since, threatening to "fix me."

Friday night, Rigsbee said, he and "friends" were watching televised fights in the De Luxe Cafe, 800 K st. nw., when Scheve entered and "gave me a dirty look." He said he and the friends, fearing trouble, left the place and went to a nearby cafe to see the finish of the fights.

Afterward, he said, he went to two poolrooms, in the second of which the shooting subsequently occurred. There, he said, Scheve entered with another man and remarked "There's that —— I mean Rigsbee. I'm going to fix him one of these days."

Rigsbee said he saw the other man pass something to Scheve which he believed to be a knife. He then put up his hands, Rigsbee said, told Scheve he didn't want any trouble, and walked out.

Next, he said, he took a cab to the Trailways Bus Station, 12th st., and New York ave. nw. There, he said, he saw some men he knew only by sight, and asked if any of them had a gun. He said he told them he wanted it to "scare a guy" who was threatening him.

None of the men had one, he said, but another who overheard the conversation summoned him aside, and offered him a gun. The two went across the street to the Greyhound Bus Terminal—Rigsbee's signed statement said. There the man who was unknown to him, took a gun from a locker, and sold it to him for $20.

Then, Rigsbee said, he returned to the poolroom. As he entered, at 12:45 a. m., he said, Scheve was standing against the right hand wall, about 15 to 20 feet back.

Insisting that he merely intended to frighten Scheve, Rigsbee said he drew the gun, pointed it, and said that "now we'll see who's going to fix who." He said he did not intend to fire and was suprised when the gun went off.

Four Shots Fired

Police said four shots were fired. Dr. Christopher J. Murphy, deputy District Coroner, said one hit Scheve under the left armpit, toward the back, passed through the heart, both lungs, and emerged under the right armpit. He said Scheve died in a few seconds.

As the firing started, witnesses said, 30 to 40 men in the place scrambled for cover under pool tables, on the floor, or any place that afforded shelter. One, however, didn't make it.

He was David Silverman, 42, of 1326 Missouri ave. nw. A bullet passed through his right thigh. He was taken to Emergency Hospital, but was released yesterday afternoon.

Rigsbee said he told the other men not to worry, he didn't intend to hit them, then walked out. A patrol wagon from the Thirteenth Precinct was passing and stopped. He walked to officers from the wagon, told them he had shot a man, and held out the gun. As one officer reached for it, Rigsbee dropped it, but obligingly picked it up and handed it over.

Homicide squad detectives said they verified from a witness, whom they declined to name, that when Scheve and Rigsbee first had words in the poolroom, Scheve was handed a penknife by another man. They are searching for the other man. However, when Scheve was shot, police said, he had no weapon on him, but had $195 in cash.

After Rigsbee made his written and signed staement to homicide squad detectives, robbery squad men remembered they were seeking a "Rigsby" for a robbery on December 1.

At that time, Charles Lombardi, 41, a truck driver, of 616 Maryland ave. sw., told officers he was slugged at 8th and I sts. nw., and when he recovered consciousness he was in an auto with three men. One, Lombardi said, known to him as "Rigsby," was going through his wallet. It contained only a check, he said, so the man threw it back to him. Another, he said, forced whisky down his throat and then drove him back to 8th and I sts. and pushed him out of the auto.

Confronted with the story, Rigsbee admitted he was the man, police said.

They said that Rigsbee has a police record here. On May 21, 1934, they said he was given two years probation for a robbery. There were no further entries until 1945. Since then he has been arrested five times for disorderly conduct, and forfeited $5 on each charge. Also, in 1945, he was arrested for simple assault and given a $25 fine or 30 days.

Officers said that though Scheve has been known to them as a gambler for some time, he has no police record except the gaming and assault convictions last April. At that time, testimony was introduced that Scheve had said he "paid plenty" for protection for his dice game. No direct evidence of such payments was adduced.

Rigsbee was arraigned on the murder charge before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence, and held without bond. A nominal bond of $1000 was set on an assault charge in the shooting of Silverman. Rigsbee was moved to the District Jail. He will appear at 11:30 a. m., Tuesday at a coroner's inquest into the death of Scheve.

The shooting took place only a block from another poolroom where an argument last February led to a shooting on the sidewalk outside and clubbing of another man. At that time, two Baltimore men, James T. Skeens and John J. Bruno, came here to collect an alleged dice game debt.

They engaged in the argument in the poolroom with Lonnie Polson, then of 1706 67th ave., Cheverly, Md., and Edward R. Ryan of 1013 8th st. nw. Ryan was shot in the leg and Polson clubbed. The Baltimore men were caught later by Police Pvt. Theodore Marquis and disarmed. After conviction on assault charges, Bruno was given an 18-month sentence and Skeens, 16 months to 4 years.

Filling Station Friend Aids in Slaying Check

Prince Georges County detectives yesterday sent Jerry Springman, 20, "best friend" of mysteriously slain Winston C. Clay, jr., to Baltimore in the hope that Springman could identify a suspect in the murder of the young gas station attendant.

The suspect, detectives reported, frequented the Kirwan Sunoco Station, 8616 Baltimore blvd., Berwyn, Md., where the 18-year-old Clay was found shot to death last Tuesday.

Springman, an attendant at another Kirwan station was to examine police rogues gallery pictures in an attempt to identify the man. The only other lead detectives have to his identification is that he drove an old model car, similar to the black coupe seen leaving the station at 11:30 a. m. the day of the murder.

Detectives, meantime, had uncovered one other clew yesterday. The gun used to kill Clay, they said, has been identified as a "Hi-Standard" made automatic, a weapon used in target practice.

Beginning: The Secrets of Personal Power

By David Guy Powers
Instructor of Instructors, Dale Carnegie Institute

(A condensation of the book, "Live a New Life," Doubleday & Co., Inc. Copyright by David Guy Powers. All rights reserved.)

CHECK back on all the disputes of your life. What do you discover?

They began in a spirit of righteous indignation and ended in a spirit of hatred. You found within your opposition the root of evil—evil beyond evil. People had taken advantage of you, slighted you, ignored you, cheated you, imputed bad motives to your well-meant deeds. You determined to get justice at any cost.

Now check back on the pleasant associations of your life. What do you find?

A common bond was established. It broadened until your associates became a part of your very self. They thought as you in the minds of others. It is as did. They were as you were. All the noble elements of your character flowered when you were with them and you were proud of yourself. You felt what Epictetus called the "festival of living with men."

THE SECRET behind your successes was that you discovered areas of agreement. You learned to concede, to adjust, to persuade your associates that your cause was theirs.

You sought likenesses and dismissed differences. You avoided force and sought understanding. this is the very core of persuasion—"sweet reasonableness."

The roots of the word "persuasion"—per and suasio—mean "through sweetness." Persuasion is a process of implanting motives opposed to force as day is to night.

Force gets a violent and sudden reaction. Persuasion gets a gradual and unfolding reaction. Persuasion commends itself to the hearts of man, force confuses his intelligence.

This is not easy to learn.

Woodrow Wilson, the most learned of all our Presidents, said:

"The way we generally strive for our rgihts is by getting our fighting blood up. And I venture to say that is the long way and not the short way. If you come to me with your fists doubled, I think I can promise you that mine will double as fast as yours. But if you say, 'Let us sit down and take counsel together' . . . we will presently find that we are not so far apart at all. That the points on which we differ are few and the points on which we agree are many, that if we only have the patience and the candor and the desire to get together we will get together."

This way of living is acquired slowly.

It is an attitude that must be cultivated.

THEODORE Roosevelt, whose depth of understanding is a monument to his greatness, left this account of his efforts:

"I stood out for my own opinion alone. I took the best mugwump stand: my own conscience, my own judgments were to decide in all things. I would listen to no argument, no advice. I took the isolate peak on every issue—and people left me! When I looked around, I found myself alone.

"What did I do? I looked the ground over and made up my mind that there were several other excellent people, with honest opinions of the right, even though they differed from me. I turned in to help them and they turned to and gave me a hand. And so we were able to get things done. We did not agree on all things, but we did in some, and those we pulled at together."

This was the beginning. So well did Theodore Roosevelt master the art of handling men that in a commemorative tribute, Brander Matthews said:

"He loved nature in all its aspects, sea and plain and mountain but he loved human nature even more. He had the keen perception and the abundant humor which enabled him to understand his fellow man wherever he might meet him—on the throne, amid all the trappings of empire, or in a tent of branches in the depth of a forest."

In one of the most pertinent passages of his autobiography, Benjamin Franklin says: "I made it a rule to forbear all contradictions to the sentiments of others, and all positive assertions of my own."

Franklin went even further and adopted this manner as a mode of life.

YOU ARE probably saying that this type of modesty is impossible to obtain. And you are almost right.

If you have been engaging in the joy of telling people off, and taking pride in asserting yourself, it will come hard. Benjamin Franklin said he was worse than you. Yet he conquered this habit and replaced it with such tact that he became one of our most successful businessmen, one of our leading statesmen, and the best diplomat we have ever produced.

Perhaps the firmest believer in this "area-of-agreement" approach is John R. Steelman, the first man to hold the title of Special Assistant to the President of the United States.

For seven years he ran the strike-settling Conciliation Service with incredible success—87 percent of all disputes settled. I asked him the secret of this success.

"Don't try to decide the quarrel for the disputing parties," he said. "Induce them to decide it for themselves. You can't make anybody do anything. Our whole attitude is, 'here we are, we want you to get together.'"

"Direct the minds of the litigants to the areas of agreement and agreement will follow. No human confiict is so intense that there is no common ground. Find that ground and stay on it."

IF YOU would follow the sure path to success, do this:

1. Cultivate the attitude of agreement.
2. Accept men as they are and seek to understand them.
3. When disputes arise ask yourself: "How far can I go along with his views?"
4. Assure the opposition that an agreement can be reached.
5 Establish areas of agreement and agreement will follow.

Traffic claimed three lives in the District and nearby Maryland Friday night and early yesterday. A heavy series of accidents also sent 18 persons to hospitals.

Two youths were killed and two others seriously injured at about 4 a. m. when their speeding car went out of control and rolled down an embankment at Reno rd. and Tilden st. nw.

The four youths were all graduates of Notre Dame University.

Killed in the crash were James C. Harding, jr., 23, the driver, a law student at the University of Pennsylvania and a son of Dr. and Mrs. James C. Harding, of 5428 41st st. nw., and George T. Giragi, 21 of 1606 New Hampshire ave. nw.

In Emergency Hospital

Injured were Frank Finn, jr., 21, a Federal Bureau of Investigation employe, of 1606 New Hampshire ave. nw., and Joseph T. Maloney, 21, a night law student at Georgetown University, of 1312 16th st. nw. Both were taken to Emergency Hospital.

Finn was reported in critical condition with a fractured skull and head and wrist cuts. Maloney's condition was described as serious. He suffered undetermined head injuries and possible fractures of the shoulder and nose.

Dr. Harding, who is the assistant medical director of the Veterans Administration, said the young men had been visiting at his home and his son was driving them back to their homes in the doctor's car.

Police Report High Speed

Police said the car was traveling south on Reno rd. "at a very high speed." Just south of Tilden st. it hit the right curb and went out of control.

Police said the car swerved to the left and went over a concrete road divider, knocking down a "Keep to the Right" sign, then continued across the intersection, passing over a triangular island in the middle of the intersection.

At some point in its journey across the intersection, the car turned on its top and skidded in this manner for about 20 feet, then went over a curb and into the ravine where it struck several trees.

Harding and Giragi died of crushed skulls. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued certificates of accidental death.

Harding, his father said, had come home from the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia for the weekend especially for a visit with Giragi, his close friend at Notre Dame. Harding was graduated from Notre Dame last June.

Giragi, whose family lives in Holbrook, Ariz., came to Washington about a month ago to take a job as a Capitol policeman.

Harding was graduated from Wilson High School in 1944. He played in amateur tennis tournaments here during his high school years. Last year he was elected secretary of the senior class at Notre Dame.

Prince Georges County police said the tractor-trailer was driven by J. C. Keith, 26, of Society Hills, S. C.

Police quoted Keith as saying he was driving south on the highway when two men started to cross the highway in front of him.

Keith said one of the men got across safely but that Bean hesitated. Keith said he applied his brakes but could not avoid striking Bean, who apparently was killed instantly.

Police were unable to learn the identity of the second man.

Driver Posts Bonds

Keith posted $500 bond on a technical charge of manslaughter and $100 bond on a charge of reckless driving by colliding with a pedestrian. He will appear at a hearing in Hyattsville Police Court December 18.

However, a passenger in his car, William A. Monch, 18, of RFD 2, Falls Church, was unconscious and in critical condition at the same hospital. Monch suffered head injuries.

Police said Catte's car was going west on Lee hwy. when it hit the rear of a bus driven by John A Hutton, 25, of 506 Grove ave., Falls Church.

Ex-GI Job Security May Be Bolstered

By Jerry Kluttz

A Federal Court of Appeals ruling is due to be handed down soon which could give veterans far greater job security in Government.

In contrast, career nonveterans would have far less security if the decision goes against the Government. In addition, Civil Service would be forced to overhaul its layoff rules to give job preference to veterans in temporary and war service jobs over nonveterans who have served their Government a lifetime.

At stake is the answer to this question—Is the Veterans' Preference Act of 1912 still in effect?

A Federal District Court in Boston implied in a decision that the 1912 law is still effective. On the other hand, a similar court in New York agreed with the Civil Service Commission that the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 superseded the 1912 law.

The New York decision was appealed by a group of veterans who had been laid off from the Brooklyn Navy Yard. A ruling on the appeal is due any day and the Civil Service Commission here is anxiously awaiting it.

The 1912 act makes no distinction between veterans who have permanent war service and temporary appointments, like present Civil Service-approved lay off sys-it, all veterans, regardless of status, would get preference during layoffs over all nonveterans.

GSA: Another dispute headed for a court decision involves the Civil Service-approved lay off system being used by the General Services Administration.

About 200 GSA employes who have either been fired or demoted from Federal Supply, Public Buildings, and other GSA agencies other than War Assets will take their cases to court. They have retained Byron Scott, an attorney here, who is a former member of Congress, to represent them.

Civil Service officials have been reviewing their rulings on GSA layoffs during the past several days. In general, the rulings have been reaffirmed. However, the Civil Service legal staff insists that WAA is a "liquidating" agency, an opinion GSA lawyers don't agree with. But the staff agrees that WAA employes have the right to "bump" employes with fewer retention points from their jobs in other GSA agencies.

The appealing employes will claim that WAA people have no legal right to jobs in other GSA agencies.

Meantime, WAA is being abolished, GSA officials explain, however, that the function of disposing of surplus Federal property will be carried on by other GSA agencies after January 1. In other words, that merely the agency's name, and not its function, was abolished.

As first considered by Congress, the bill that created GSA would have denied WAA employes job rights in other GSA agencies. But that provision, GSA officials point out, was stricken out by Congress.

An agency committee to hear appeals from the many employes who are being demoted and fired has been set up within GSA. It will advise Personnel Director William Rehlander on appeals and job qualifications of the appealing employes.

Harrison E. Meyer of Community Facilities is chairman, and serving with him are L. A. Ziernicki of Public Buildings; Gerald Gerard of Federal Supply, and H. F. Rily of Federal Supply.

AGRICULTURE: Its employe bulletin has suggested the creation of a special laboratory for retired scientists of the department so they won't need to "hang around like friendly spirits" with nothing to do. It believes such a project would pay dividends in new discoveries by the elderly scientists who find retirement "extremely stultifying."

XMAS GIFT: If you're planning to send a Christmas present to a Government worker outside of this city—consider the Federal Employe Newsletter, a gift that lasts an entire year.

The letter is clear and concise. It's published regularly every other week by The Washington Post and it will keep field employes fully informed on the many developments here that affects them such as changes in pay, retirement, top personnel, etc.

Subscriptions are $8 a year; $8.75 airmail. Mail subscriptions to: The Federal Employe Newsletter, The Washington Post, 1337 E st. nw., Washington 4, D. C.

Yule Buyers Jam Shopping Area—In and Out of Stores

A turtle with a charleyhorse would have felt right at home on F street yesterday.

That was about the pace forward, as thousands of Washingtonians jammed the downtown area for the biggest shopping date of the season to date.

By afternoon F street was just about one solid mass of humanity, as they say. So were the stores inside. It looked almost as if when someone went in a store someone else would have to leave to make room for him.

Buying Everything

At some counters long lines of people were standing two and three deep, waiting to buy everything one needs or wants for Christmas, from underwear, whoops! lingerie, to umbrellas.

For the most part it was a remarkably good-natured crowd, moving along almost gently to "Adeste Fidelis" and "Hark the Herald Angels" broadcast from the Salvation Army booths.

As the sign on the department store perfume counter said: "Catch the Yuletide Spirit."

Of course, it was almost more than a man's life was worth to step into a revolving door—there were even lines for these. Someone reported he went around three times before being flipped out on the same side he entered.

Catch Yule Spirit

But that was unusual. No old women were knocked down by grown men rushing for elevators. A very nice crowd, catching the Yuletide spirit.

At one counter two soldiers were seen trying to purchase a bra and using gestures to indicate the size wanted.

Many more customers crowded the counters selling such things as this, and perfume and the like, than in the men's ties and pajama departments. Which might indicate that women, as usual, are in for a bigger Christmas than men.

As the sign on the underwear, whoops! lingerie, counter said: "Give Her the Joy of Being Remembered."

50 Volunteers Fail to Find Drowned GI

An Air Force corporal who dived unsuccessfully into the Potomac, Friday, attempting to save a drowning sergeant, was among 50 men who volunteered before daybreak yesterday to search for the body.

The corporal is Philip L. Hawkins, 19, of Randolph, Mass., who was the other crew member on a Bolling Air Force Base shuttle boat with T/Sergt. Omer Vincent, 23, of Warren, R. I. Vincent fell from the boat near the entrance to the Pentagon lagoon, and sank after swimming a distance in a heavy uniform overcoat.

Ordered to Take Rest

When the 50 volunteers appeared yesterday, Lieut. Walter G. Kelly, head of the air-sea rescue detachment, declined Corporal Hawkins' services, directing him to get more rest. He had been treated Friday at the Pentagon Dispensary for shock and exposure, but was released.

Meantime, Maj. Rosario Montcalm, chaplain at Bolling Air Force Base, received a telegram yesterday from Sergeant Vincent's mother, Mrs. Annie Vincent of Warren, R. I.

"Sincere Appreciation"

"Please convey our sincere appreciation and gratitude to Corporal Hawkins," it said, "for his effort to safe the life of Omer. We sincerely hope and pray for his speedy recovery."

The 50 Bolling volunteers, 8 Navy divers, and other Navy personnel joined Harbor Police yesterday in a day-long search for Sergeant Vincent's body. The divers went down in 30-to-40-minute relays in the cold, murky water, but had no success. They stopped the search at nightfall and will resume it today.

Palmer, Famed News Broker, Is Dead at 93

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP).—Charles M. Palmer, veteran newspaper publisher and broker, died today at his home here. He was 93.

Palmer, owner of the St. Joseph (Mo.) News-Press and Gazette, was one of the oldest members of the Associated Press. He helped found the present Associated Press in 1900.

Palmer died of pneumonia, his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Charles Sill Palmer, said. He had been ill about two months.

Palmer owned, outright or in part, many daily papers. He participated in the operation of more than 50 publications from coast to coast.

In the latter part of the past century, Palmer used to relate, he had a chance to buy an option on a controlling interest in the New York Times for $50,000. He said he could have closed the deal for $25,000, because "I inferred that the desire was to unload what seemed to be a hopeless situation, and that $25,000 would have been effective as an offer for the option."

His first newspaper job was as a correspondent for the La Crosse Chronicle at $12 a week. He went to the Minneapolis Miller a few years later for $15 a week and advertising commissions. Two years later he bought the paper, after saving $5000 to make the down payment.

In 1889 William Randolph Hearst appointed Palmer to manage the San Francisco Examiner at $10,000 a year.

Palmer helped two of his former department heads at Minneapolis buy the St. Joseph News-Press and eventually became the principal owner.

Besides his daughter-in-law, Palmer is survived by a sister, Mrs. James Taylor, and a niece, Mrs. Maurine Littlefield, both of Hollywood, Calif.

Symphony Fund Leaders Announced

Samuel Spencer, Washington attorney, has been named general chairman of the National Symphony Orchestra's twentieth annual Sustaining Fund Campaign.

The drive opens January 10 and will continue through February 10. Its goal—the difference between estimated receipts and expenditures for the 1950-1951 orchestra season—has not been determined yet.

Named vice chairmen of the drive are Mrs. Hans A. Klagsbrunn and Mrs. Clinton S. Rayner.

Dr. Klagsbrunn, a physician engaged in Baltimore as a research associate of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, is second vice president of the orchestra's board of directors. Mrs. Rayner, who has been associated with sustaining fund drives for the last eight years, was chairman of the drive's suburban committee last year.

Spencer, a native Washingtonian, is partner in the law firm of Spencer & Louisell. He was elected a National Symphony director in 1948, and is a director of Children's Hospital, Garfield Hospital and the Potomac School.

The slogan for the forthcoming drive, he announced, will be "Music for Everyone."

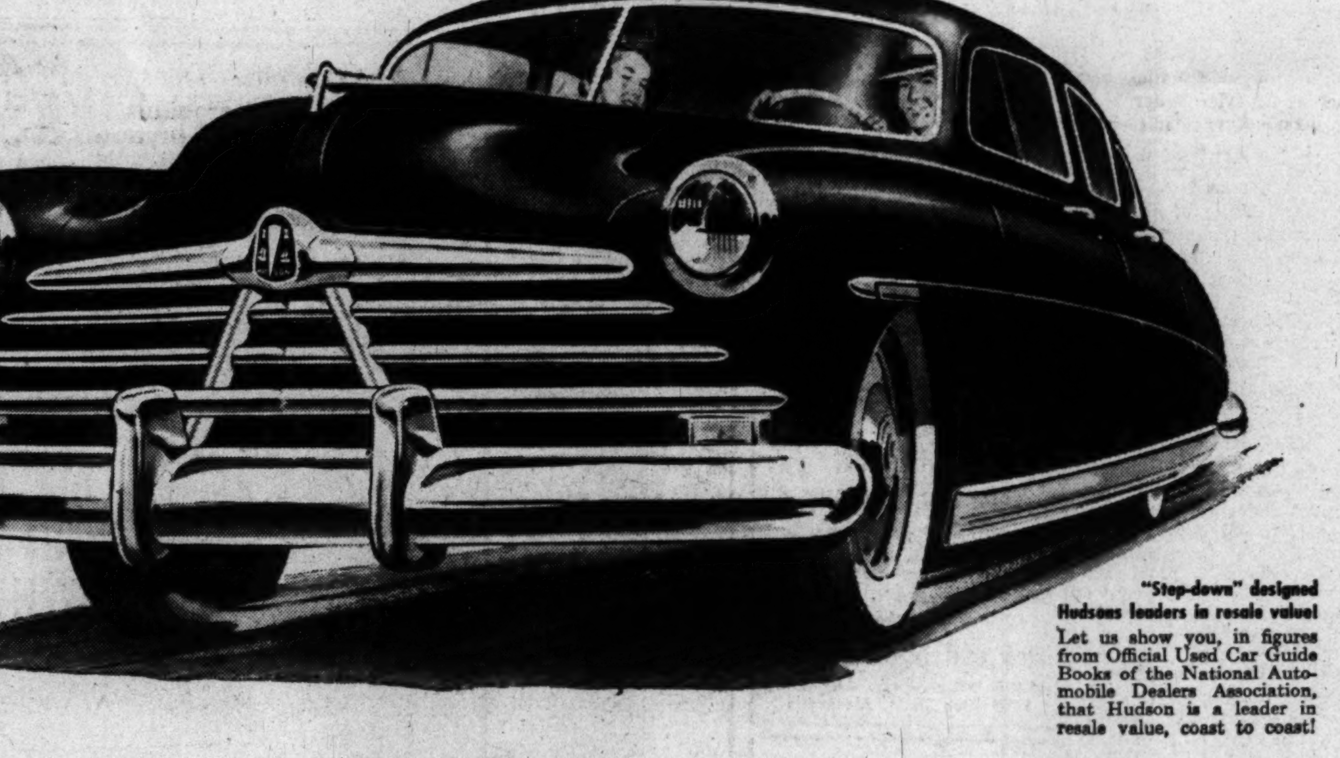
Lower-Priced Hudson
Taking the country by storm!



"Step-down" designed Hudsons leaders in resale value! Let us show you, in figures from Official Used Car Guide Books of the National Automobile Dealers Association, that Hudson is a leader in resale value, coast to coast!

In two days, more than a million people flocked to see the new Pacemaker and many thousands placed their orders for this exciting new car that costs less to buy . . . less to drive!

COME IN TODAY! See what the excitement's all about. Try the new Pacemaker! For here, at less cost, are all the beauty, roominess, riding qualities and safety that can come only with Hudson's "step-down" design!

Here, for instance, is a car that you can instantly see is the lowest-built of them all! Free-flowing, close-to-the-ground design telegraphs the fact that it has the lowest center of gravity in any American automobile—and as a result, you know instinctively, as you view the exciting Hudson Pacemaker, that it hugs the road more tenaciously and is therefore America's safest car!

You quickly see, too, that this new member of the low-built Hudson family has full road clearance and more head room than in any mass-produced car built today—thanks to "step-down" design and recessed floor!

And amazing head room is only one kind of interior spaciousness you'll find in the economical, new Pacemaker. Through "step-down" design and ingenious use of space that is wasted in other makes of cars, this compact automobile of normal exterior width brings you more roominess and seat cushions that are up to 12 inches wider than those in even the most expensive cars!

It is no longer necessary to put up with crowding, for the Pacemaker provides more room for you than in any other make, at any price!

In fact, this car is so marvelous, and the performance of its new high-compression Pacemaker Six engine is so thrilling, that you can't begin to appreciate it until you see it and ride in it! Won't you accept our invitation for a demonstration ride in Hudson's new Pacemaker, today?

Mental Care Funds Rise Told by Tuck

Richmond, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—State appropriations for the maintenance and operation of the State mental hospital system have been increased 207 percent in the past 10 years "in the continuing effort to provide improved care and treatment for the unfortunate patients in these institutions," Governor Tuck disclosed today.

During this period, he added, the patient population has risen only 12.3 percent.

The Governor said his statements were being presented "simply in order that the people of Virginia may be accurately informed on what has been done, and is being done, in behalf of the population of these hospitals."

He noted that expenditures for personal service by the six mental hospitals have increased substantially each year since 1946, and for the year ended last June 30 "totaled $2,691,325."

The Governor produced figures on expenditures for personal service by the six hospitals during his term and for "sample" years prior as follows: 1939, $676,125; 1942, $840,812; 1946, $1,153,755; 1947, $1,604,732; 1948, $2,269,224, and 1949, $2,691,325.

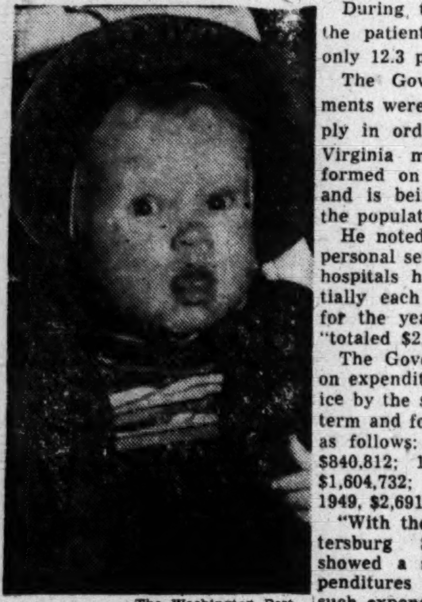
"With the exception of the Petersburg State Colony, which showed a small decrease in expenditures for personal service, such expenditures at every one of the six hospitals were larger for the year ended June 30, 1949, than for the year ended June 30, 1948," the Governor said.

The Governor said that both he and the General Assembly had been responsive to the demands of these institutions and said it has been the policy of both to assign one of the "topmost priorities" to the mental hospitals.

"If every dollar of the State's revenue were made available to the hospital system, the millennium could not be attained overnight. There are many improvements that must come gradually, over a period of time, irrespective of the funds at the disposal of the hospitals.

"Certainly, from the financial standpoint, every encouragement has been given and is now being given to the further improvement of this service."

Taken by Friend
Child, 'Lost' Two Hours, Found in Car



The Washington Post
LINDA LEE ALLISON
Taken for a ride

A woman who accepted a nighbor's offer to drive her and her adopted 16-month-old daughter to a drugstore yesterday emerged from the store to find the neighbor and the baby gone.

The little tear-stained girl was found by police in the car parked three blocks away from the store two hours later.

The neighbor was discovered drunk at his home and taken to headquarters on an open charge—still to intoxicated to talk coherently.

The woman, Mrs. Beulah Allison, 614 C st. ne. reported a friend of the family offered to drive her and the child to the drugstore at 11th and H sts. ne.

Mrs. Allison got out at the store, leaving the baby, Linda Lee Allison, in the car with the driver.

When she emerged at about 1:30 p. m., the auto was gone. Frantically she searched the neighborhood without success, then notified police at 3 p. m.

At 3:30 p. m. police received a call from Francis Campbell of 604 12th st. ne., who reported a baby in a car in front of his home had been crying for almost two hours.

Police found the car doors unlocked, removed the weeping child and through the license tag numbers traced the driver to his home a block away.

Outpatient Unit Opened At Garfield

Opening of a new out-patient department at Garfield Memorial Hospital was announced yesterday by L. G. Schmelzer, administrator of the hospital.

Schmelzer said the new department, on the first floor of the Willard Building, is part of a program to improve hospital service.

Directed by Dr. Malcolm F. Harrison, the department offers facilities for diagnostic and therapeutic service in virtually every phase of medicine, the announcement said. The clinic has some 45 practicing physicians on its staff.

The new quarters take the place of the old dispensary, which was in a detached building several hundred yards from the hospital.

Where's Her Mother...?

The Washington Post
Chubby baby girl abandoned by mother in bus depot

A nine-month-old girl was being cared for at Gallinger Hospital yesterday while police attempted to trace the mother who abandoned the child Friday night.

At about 9 p. m. Friday an out-of-town woman whom police did not identify was approached in the women's rest room at the Greyhound Bus Terminal by a woman who had a baby in her arms.

The woman with the baby asked the other woman to hold her while she looked for the mother of the baby who she said was making a telephone call in one of the booths.

The out-of-town woman held the baby for about 15 minutes but no one appeared. She had to catch a bus so she took the child to the manager's office and police were called.

The baby girl weighed 20 pounds and one ounce and was wearing a white flannel nightgown, a white cotton undershirt, a diaper and rubber panties and a blue bonnet and blue sweater.

Inoculation Urged to Curb Diphtheria

With diphtheria on the increase here, District Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger yesterday urged inoculation of all children under 10 who have not been immunized within two years.

Diphtheria antitoxin is the only remedy for the disease, Seckinger said, and should be given as early a possible.

Children may be inoculated at Health Department clinics at Polk Health Center, 7th and P sts. nw. (Tuesdays at 3 p. m.), and at Southwest Health Center, Delaware ave. and I st. sw. (Wednesdays at 3 p. m.).

Ten cases of diphtheria, including one death, have been reported in the District since October 1. A total of 39 cases and six deaths have been reported this year, as compared with five cases and no deaths in the first nine months of 1948.

Seckinger said delay in treating diphtheria with antitoxin appears to account for all deaths from the disease and for the severity of some other cases. He advised persons with sore throats to have throat cultures taken.

Andrews Base Blood Donors Give 314 Pints

Andrews Army Air Force Base personnel donated 314 pints of blood Friday during a visit of the Red Cross bloodmobile, setting a new record for a one day collection.

Red Cross officials attributed this partly to the offer by Col. William W. Jones, base commanding officer, to give each donor a half day off. Maj. Norwood Brown was chairman of the blood recruitment at the base.

Five visits are scheduled this week.

Monday, 10 a. m. to 4 p. m., Wilson Boulevard Christian Church, Wilson blvd. and North Piedmont st.; Tuesday, Martinsburg, W. Va.; Wednesday, 10 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., Presbyterian Church, East Broad and Fairfax sts., Falls Church, Va.; Thursday, 2 to 9 p. m., Dorchester Apartments, 2480 16th st. nw., and Friday, Bolling Field Recreation Hall, 8:30 a. m. to 4 p. m.

Amvets Urge Strengthening Of Reserve

The national executive committee of Amvets, meeting at the Shoreham Hotel, called yesterday for stronger military reserve organizations in the Nation's defense setup.

The committee took action after hearing the "informal" report of a Fairlington advertising consultant, Charles T. Dockarty, who charged that a 1948 Presidential edict ordering maximum strength for reserve units has not yet been implemented fully.

"Civilian reserve, Dockarty declared, "has deteriorated dangerously."

The committee also authorized National Commander Harold Russell to appoint a committee to investigate weaknesses in reserve units of the Army, Navy and Marines.

The Amvet group, in the first day of a two-day session, also decided to hold its 1950 convention in Cleveland. Labor Day weekend has tentatively been set as the date.

At the request of Senator William Langer, North Dakota Republican, the committee is scheduled to take a stand on the recognition of the Chinese Communist regime.

Bridge Repair Job Will End by March 1

The job of reinforcing the District approach to the new Highway Bridge against further sinking is under way and is expected to be completed by March 1.

Weather permitting, District officials said, all other construction work on the bridge should be finished by that date or before.

The $130,000 reinforcement project consists of sinking piles about 100 feet to bedrock to support crossbeams which will hold up the wingwalls.

Reached 19 Inches

It was these concrete wingwalls—which will form the sides to the sloping approach roadway — that have been slowly sinking in the mud. Sinkage at one point reached 19 inches.

S. R. Harrison, District engineer of streets, yesterday said the sinking has practically stopped. In the last few weeks the movement has been so slight—a few hundredths of an inch a week—that it could be measured accurately only about every 10 days.

The work now being done will prevent further sinking, Harrison said, but will not restore the wingwalls to their original position.

Sinking Cause Cited

District engineers attributed the sinking to the fact that piles supporting the wingwalls had been sunk only about half the way to bedrock.

Friction from surrounding mud was expected to support the piles. But tons of fill placed there to form the approach road apparently exerted a pressure that forced the piles further down.

Piles supporting the bridge itself were driven down to bedrock, Harrison said.

Prayers Asked

New Yorkers Restless in Water Crisis

New York, Dec. 10 (AP). — New York City, restless with fear over its water crisis, moved on new fronts for relief today—and did not forget to ask divine assistance.

While the city government wrestled with the problem on a material level, Water Commissioner Stephen J. Carney asked churches and synogogues to pray for help.

Although the water level in the reservoirs dropped again yesterday, the city ran into its first organized resistance to the save-water campaign as some auto laundry owners balked at the ban on car washing and said they would defy the shut-down order.

Abraham M. Bell, president of the Auto Laundries Owners Association said the shops would stay open and wash any car that comes in.

Carney replied that an owner will be fined $5 for the first offense and have his water shut off if it is repeated.

Press and radio continued to hammer home the need of saving every drop and more prohibitions on water use were planned. Despite the campaign, the reservoir level dropped another 0.3 percent in the last 24-hour period. This was a loss of 871 million gallons that brought the reserve down to only 86,982,000,000 as campared with the normal level of 253 billion.

Beret Tariff Cut Protested

1939. Then 52, he arrived with his wife Emma, then 40, and his daughters, Hanni, then 20, and Dorrit Claire, who was 15.

They were natives of Czechoslovakia and citizens of France, having lived in Paris for the preceding six years. The Zuckers had sizable American investments, Among his first moves was to buy a furniture factory which had gone into liquidation, in East Arlington, Vt. Warren R. Austin, then Republican Senator from Vermont, now head of the American mission to the United Nations, sponsored special legislation to permit admission of the Zuckers for permanent residence here.

Their beret business was launched in Buffalo, N. Y., later moving to New York City. In its Long Island City factory, the firm made Army clothing during the war. Since the war, the factory has specialized in berets—knitted wool basque berets.

In February of this year, the firm asked the Tariff Commission to order an inquiry for restoration of the tariff rates pulled down the year before under the postwar Geneva Tariff and Trade Agreement. The commission declined, by a 3-3 vote to order the investigation, but the company returned last month with a new appeal to the Tariff Commission for relief under the escape clause of the Geneva agreement.

Cites Rate Cuts

In its February brief, the firm pointed out that tariff rates on berets had been 50 cents a pound plus 50 percent on the basis of value. Under the Geneva agreement the rate was cut to 37½ cents a pound, plus 25 cents on the basis of value. The firm asked return of the old rate.

The company said it employs about 75 persons and has a $400,000 plant investment, of which one fourth is in machinery so specialized it can be used only for berets.

It said that during 1948, under the reduced tariff, berets from the Czech factory formerly controlled by the Zuckers had been coming into this country in ever-increasing quantities. In that year, beret imports totaled 84,000 dozen from Czechoslovakia, 13,000 dozen from France, 16,000 dozen from Great Britain, and 8000 dozen from Italy. As a result, the American company said, it lost $40,000 that year on sales of about $400,000.

Unfair Competition

The firm said the Czech competition was "grossly unfair" because the beret factory there "was acquired without cost, is operated without need for profit, and at labor rates which are far below those of the United States."

In its new appeal to the Tariff Commission, the firm said that in recent months its problems have been increased with new French imports of berets at prices lower than those on Czech berets. The firm says its own cost of production is $6 a dozen, 50 cents below the wartime OPA price; and in some cases it has sold at prices of $5.25 a dozen; against New York prices on French berets of $3.84 to $4.25 a dozen; and corresponding prices on Czech berets of $4.30 to $4.75 a dozen.

The firm protested "the vile political motives" which led to seizure of their Czech factory and declared that "nothing would suit the Czechoslovakian government better than augmenting the unemployment situation in the United States."

Should the Tariff Commission recommend relief, the final action would be up to the President, it was pointed out.

Gulf's Balmy Air Dispels D. C.'s Snow Threat

A warm-air mass moving norheastward from the Gulf of Mexico, saved Washington a snowfall last night and today, according to Government weather forecasters.

Though they predicted "occasional rain" today, they said the warm-air mass had raised temperatures to a point where the moisture will not crystallize. They predicted a low of 34 early today and a high of 40 during the day.

In western Virginia, three inches of snow fell in Alleghany County and snowplows were out to clear roads. Other highway crews sanded and salted icy spots. Shenandoah Valley communities below Luray had about a half inch of snow. There were flurries at Richmond.

Reports to the Weather Bureau here said rain was falling in western Maryland and due to move eastward. The forecasters opined most of the Virginia precipitation now will be rain.

High temperature in Washington yesterday was 40, at 2:55 p. m. Low was 30 at 2:25 a. m.

Subzero Cold Hits North; Blizzard Rages in West

By The Associated Press

Late fall exploded with wintry fury in sections from California to Maine yesterday, causing at least four deaths.

A subzero cold air mass chilled the Northeast. The lowest temperature, 20 below, was recorded at Ware, Mass.

Sleet or freezing rain glazed highways and communications lines across much of the Midwest. A cold wave and blizzard hit northern Montana and spread south and eastward. Winds lashed the southern California coast line.

Ice-coated roads were a factor in three highway accident deaths in Iowa. William McLelland, a prominent rancher, was killed when his private plane crashed in a fog that enveloped Texas.

Cold and blizzard warnings were issued for North and South Dakota, Nebraska, western Kansas, Minnesota and Wisconsin. The heaviest snowfall of the season was predicted for Iowa Sunday. Winds were expected to get up to 40 miles an hour in the blizzard area.

30 Americans At New Delhi for Relations Talks

Thirty Americans have arrived in New Delhi to attend an unofficial Indian-American Relations Conference, according to cable reports yesterday.

Among the educators, newspapermen, business leaders and labor relations experts making the trip are Herbert Elliston, editor of The Washington Post, and Colgate W. Darden, jr., president of the University of Virginia.

The conference, scheduled for December 12-22, is to explore means of "strengthening all aspects of Indian-American relations."

Swift Growth Taxes Montgomery County Schools

By Agnes E. Meyer
Post Reporter

HOW THANKFUL we ought to be that our ancestors had the good sense to develop the American public school system. That thought was constantly in my mind as I studied the problems created by the mass-migration into the vast new housing projects of Montgomery County. What a significant role the schools have in that critical situation!

Many organizations, public and private, civic and religious, are putting forth efforts to make the county's new citizens feel at home in these aggregations of housing units, but most of them lack, as yet, the integrated sense of living which characterizes our older American communities.

In many of the completed housing developments, civic associations have been formed to give voice to local problems and local needs. The Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission has shown great foresight in constructing 11 large recreation centers at strategic sites within easy reach of some of the large housing concentrations. But the school is the only institution that reaches out its protecting wings over the children of school and preschool age in these artificial settlements. It is the only institution which can make these very different families feel that somebody cares about them. Through the school system, the superintendent, principals, teachers and personnel workers, backed by the P-TAs, the League of Women Voters, the A. A. U. W. and other civic groups, are doing a daily and valiant job of bringing some 10,000 newly acquired citizens into closer relationship with each other and with the county's social structure.

In the last five years the population of Montgomery County has risen from 109,000 to an estimated 140,000. The school population has jumped from 16,000 to 24,132. Of this total, 1377 new pupils were admitted in 1947, 2535 in 1948 and 3300 in 1949. Every day additional pupils arrive in the already overcrowded classrooms. Families move into the houses as quickly as they are completed.

Nor is there an end in sight to this rapid increase of population, for the issuance of building permits has not abated. The total for 1948 was 3045 and for 1949, up to October 10, 3562 permits had been issued. The Potomac Electric Power Co., which makes careful estimates for future power requirements, expects the demand for housing to slack off somewhat in subsequent years. But equally conservative businessmen and bankers prophesy that within 5 to 10 years the county will be so built up that it will be impossible to see where Bethesda or Silver Spring end and Rockville begins. Since the postwar birth rate has not declined, the best estimates indicate that about 3000 more children will be going to school for each of the next five years. Dr. Thomas G. Pullen, State Superintendent of Schools, estimates that the school enrollment will increase until 1958 and beyond.

Construction Comes First

SO FAR the Montgomery County Board of Education has managed, as many prominent citizens put it, "to keep a roof over the children's heads." "We have been running fast, just to stay where we were," said Mrs. Durward V. Sandifer, president of the Montgomery County Board of Education. "The Board of Education has been almost exclusively occupied with the problem of acquiring land and building enough schools to keep up with the population instead of spending its time improving the quality of the school system. This makes the task of the board very difficult, because the bulk of the population is of a cultural level which expects the best for its children. What we want and need in Montgomery County is a first-class school system, but our hopes in that direction are sacrificed to these immediate construction needs. Fundamentally, we have a good educational system, but the constant pressure of pupil influx makes it difficult to maintain standards. We are often obliged to provide for quantity rather than quality."

The population of Montgomery County has made great financial sacrifices to develop a good public school system for its children from the kindergarten to junior college. The parents, through the P-TA, the A. A. U. W., the League of Women Voters and other organizations, have always done their utmost to supplement the efforts of the Board of Education. Although kindergartens are not recognized as part of the State educational program, the citizens demanded them 15 years ago and have always supported them. The Montgomery County Junior College was probably the first public institution of the kind established in the East. The average expenditure per pupil in the public schools is about $200, whereas the average for Maryland is $179 and for Virginia, $119.

These superior educational standards are to be expected in a county that has the highest percentage of high school and college graduates of any county in the country. "We have more Phi Beta Kappa keys in Montgomery County per square block than any other place in the United States, and Ph.D's are a dime a dozen," said Mr. Blair Lee, vice chairman of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, with justifiable pride. Rated as one of the wealthiest counties in the country, it has few very rich people and few very poor ones. The high economic and intellectual status is due to the fact that 70 percent of the working population are Federal workers and officials, 50 percent of whom are employed in the District of Columbia and 20 percent in the six Federal establishments situated in Montgomery County itself. The remaining 30 percent are people connected with some type of business. There is no heavy industry in Montgomery County. The population increase in the area adjacent to the National Capital has long closely paralleled the expansion of the Federal Government. In some of the elementary schools in the older, well established communities, such as Bradley in Bethesda, 95 percent of the pupils are children of Federal employes.

Council Members Elected

THE PEOPLE voted in 1948 for a new charter which provides for a council-manager form of government. The seven members of the elected council are leading citizens of the county. Mr. Frederick P. Lee, the president, is a well-known attorney; the other members being Mr. J. Douglas Bradshaw, secretary; Mrs. Ralph E. Himstead, who has a special concern in education; Mr. Thomas C. Kelly, Mr. P. Garland Ligon, Dr. Lewis Meriam and Mr. Augustus R. Selby, who comes from the upper part of the county. The county manager is Mr. Irving G. McNayr.

Unlike most large counties in other States, the educational system is not broken down into independent community units. The administrative control and supervision of the public schools is in the hands of the county Board of Education, a body of six members appointed by the Governor for overlapping terms of six years. It submits its budget to the County Manager, who in turn submits it to the County Council, which passes upon the recommendations of the board and the County Manager. The members of the Board of Education are Mrs. Durward V. Sandifer, president; Mr. James W. Gill, vice president; Mr. Wylie W. Barrow, Mr. Arthur Joseph, Mr. H. Stanley Stine and Mrs. Herman M. Wilson.

During the war years, the school system in Montgomery County had suffered the usual loss of teachers. Construction of new classrooms had to be postponed.

But 150 classrooms were added in 1947 and 1948, and enough teachers recruited to meet the classroom requirements. This year 193 classrooms are in the year's budget and 94 are already under construction.

At present there are 38 white and 18 Negro elementary schools in Montgomery County, and 11 white and one Negro high school. The normal capacity of the white elementary schools is 11,100 pupils under the new Maryland law of 30 pupils per classroom. The October enrollment of these schools was 14,923, or an overload of almost 4000. Four schools have classes on double shifts. In others, extra classrooms have been placed in basements, on the stages of general utility rooms and in cafeterias. The 18 Negro elementary schools are not as seriously overloaded but many antiquated substandard classrooms are in use. The white high schools have a capacity of 6005 pupils and an overload of 1681. The one Negro high school, an antiquated building, is so crowded that shop work has to be done in the open, weather permitting, and the gymnasium is used for three classes that try to carry on their work while the remainder of the floor space is used for exercises. In almost all of the schools the space used for extra classrooms is poorly lighted and ventilated.

Under these difficult conditions, the school principals are carrying on with administrative ability, a sense of adventure and a notably high morale. "The children are getting the skills they need," said several principals, "but the social aspects of education are necessarily curtailed." They are indeed, since the freedom of movement is limited and spontaneous group activities out of the question when all available space is pressed into service for regular class work. Individual attention to pupils is impossible when classes number 40. The school routine is disturbed by the constant invasion of new students. The lively atmosphere reminded me of the schools in overcrowded cities during the war. Yet it is a great tribute to the leadership of the County Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Edwin W. Broome, that principals, teachers and pupils alike are making a superb adjustment to a tense situation which could easily get out of hand under less skilled guidance.

Parents Share Burden

BUT THE load of mental and moral responsibility these educators are carrying and the physical strain to which they are subjected, are greater than they should be. In the older, more settled communities, the problem is less exacting because the pupils come from well-to-do, stable homes, and the parents work almost as hard as the teachers to meet the emergency. They supply library, playground and audio-visual equipment. Mothers help in the cafeterias and fathers devote Saturdays to improving the grounds around new school buildings, or painting the interiors. Perhaps the best example of parent cooperation is the "Study of Unmet Needs" conducted by school department heads and a group of laymen of which Mrs. Margaret E. Nolte was chairman. This research project revealed many speech and reading defects as well as emotional and physical handicaps. It suggested methods for improving services for these children. It achieved, among other beneficial results, the establishment at Silver Spring by the Board of Education of a school for children suffering from cerebral palsy, which was brought about through the efforts of a group of citizens of which Mrs. Rupert Lee Dunn is chairman.

Dr. Broome pointed out that Montgomery County has led the Nation in bringing a child development program to the parents to train them as leaders who in turn form study groups of other parents in their local communities. There were about 40 such local study groups last year. "This has helped thousands of parents to see the causes of child difficulties," said Dr. Broome, "and that these difficulties must be understood and eliminated by scientific research. It has made the parents allies of the teachers in freeing the child, in creating a sound parent-child relationship, and in the realization that education is the principal tool in developing human capacities."

Where such intelligent parent cooperation has been achieved, the overcrowded condition of the schools has not seriously interfered with the education of the children because the responsibility is shared between the teachers and the home. But the picture is very different in the schools nearest to the immense, newly completed housing projects, each containing a thousand or more new families from every kind of background and from every section of the country. Most of these parents are very young, inexperienced and frequently undisciplined. Half of the population in one of these so-called "villages" of over 900 homes, is between 20 and 25, the other half between 25 and 30. There is an average of two children per house. In many cases both parents work. They are often obliged to leave the house at 6 or 7 a. m. After that, the children of 6 or less must shift for themselves with no more protection than the aid of a neighbor "who keeps an eye on them." The children of school age get themselves to the bus, the first load arriving at school at 8:15 a. m. because the same bus makes several trips. The buses are too few in number and are often dangerously overcrowded. These children are tired before school begins.

Even if the mother does not work, many of these young families are emotionally insecure. There are often two sets of children if the mother lost her first husband in the war, or divorced him. Other families have been living with their parents in overcrowded homes or in trailer camps, and show the effects of the tensions they suffered before they could move into this first home of their own. Children with such backgrounds have emotional problems so deep that they are unfathomable. They are combative, undernourished, fearful. They seek escape in curious imaginative flights, in stealing and in truancy all the more difficult to control because many homes have no telephones as yet and the teachers are obliged to make visit after visit to check up on the delinquents. One poor little chap said plaintively that he saw no reason for going to school since we were all going to be blown up by a bomb before long.

The lunch the children bring to school is so unsuitable that one of these schools is constantly in the red in its luncheon budget because the teachers cannot permit the children to go hungry. One of the little boys begs food from everybody because he is neglected at home. "I'll sock you," is the favorite expression of such youngsters. They are so disturbed that their disturbance spreads and hitting leads to more hitting. Outside of school they resort to malicious destruction in the half-completed houses and to pointless stealing of useless objects. Such misuse of leisure time is inevitable where the housing projects or apartments have left no space for children's playgrounds.

'One for Every House'

"IT TAKES exceptional teachers to handle such children, and there are not enough," said one principal. Some mothers refuse to come to school. Others can't come because they work or they have small children to look after. The visiting teachers are overworked but cannot begin to reach all the homes that should be visited. A social worker was told by one mother, a woman of superior intelligence: "You need more than one social worker for this place. You need one for every house."

More school nurses are also needed. "The population growth of Silver Spring, Takoma Park, Kensington, Wheaton, Glenmont and the Colesville area has been so rapid," said Dr. Harold H. Mitchell, director of school health, "that it has not been possible to obtain nursing services sufficient to avoid a serious handicap to an effective school health program. At present in this area there is only one nurse for every 10,000 people, and it has been possible to assign only seven public health nurses to parttime elementary school health services."

This society in the making is a challenge to the public school system. Regrettable as it may seem, the home is no longer the center of moral, mental and physical education, when parents are absent all day or when they are incapable of creating a harmonious family life. Thus the Montgomery public schools have the serious problem of recasting the educational program along broader social lines to give these disturbed children a sense of peaceful cooperative living, of ethical standards and of community responsibility. The cost is heavy, for it means more individual attention to each child and each family and consequently more teachers, more personnel workers and more administrators who have a feeling for school-community relationships.

Yet the Montgomery County school system is better equipped than most to build a bridge between the school and the home. Mr. Owen Knight, supervisor of pupil personnel, has three trained assistants and a part-time psychiatric worker. A full-time

POTATOES—AMERICAN STYLE

"When you're done, mister, are you going to boil the water?"

Note—In the United States, a million tons of potatoes were destroyed in order to raise prices.

U. S. Is the Pet Joke Of Soviet Gagsters

"KROKODIL" is Russia's only humor magazine. It is published three times a month by Pravda and has a circulation of about 165,000. Formerly, its targets were slipshod factory managers, officious bureaucrats, other domestic delinquents and drunkenness and religion.

In 1946, it reset its sights. Now, according to Dr. William Nelson, it devotes almost half its space to attacking America. Of the 42 cartoons in the three May issues, 20 followed this line.

Nelson, who was a wartime OWI attache of our Moscow Embassy, is the editor of a new book, "Out of the Crocodile's Mouth" (Public Affairs Press, $2.50), which presents about 125 samples of what Krokodil thinks of us, and wants the Russian people to think. Here are three of the cartoons, complete with captions, dialogue and "notes" as they appeared in Russian in Krokodil. One of them rides on its caption alone.

Nelson's book is a part of the Current Soviet Thought Series sponsored by the Joint Committee on Slavic Studies. In a foreword, the Joint Committee emphasizes that the "views or opinions expressed or implicit in the cartoons or in the translated material accompanying them are those of the original artists or publishers, and are not to be attributed to the editor, the publisher or the sponsor of the series . . ." Needless to say, they are not to be attributed to The Washington Post, either.

Most of the cartoons in Nelson's book have appeared since the beginning of the Cold War, but Krokodil has been sniping at the United States for a long time. A 1929 item shows battleships hidden under the skirts of the Statute of Liberty. A 1932 cartoon of Hoover in formal dress before and tatters behind, appears again in 1947 with capitalism as the figure and unemployment and strikes as the hidden rags. Gangsterism is another pet subject of 1936 which pops up again in 1949.

Krokodil sweeps a wide field with its blowgun, from subsidization of college football players to Southern lynchings, and from Walt Disney to the Government employe loyalty investigation. The American press is a favorite target, of course, as is the anti-Soviet majority in the U. N., but Krokodil also finds time to poke fun at our Ark-hunting expedition to Ararat and our "invention of the idea that Edison invented" the electric lamp.

It is probably significant that Krokodil's wittiest work concerns the purely American frailties which are a stock in trade of our own cartoonists, and that the magazine is most heavy-handed when it sets up bald lies about our system. It is often heavy-handed.

U. S. Ponders 'Deal' to End U. N. Impasse

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

PRESSURE is growing within the State Department to break the log-jam which blocks the admission of 15 new members to the United Nations.

Ten of the 15 have the support of the West; five have Russia as their sponsor. The Russians have made it plain, by repeated vetoes, that the price of getting the 10 admitted is to vote for the Soviet 5 as a group.

It is too early to forecast a deal by which the West would pay the price. To make such a deal, the United States would have to swallow a good many high-principled statements it has made in the past three years.

But many officials here, and in western European foreign offices, now believe a continuance of the deadlock is hurting the West more than it is Russia. Accordingly, the United States is likely to "reexamine" its position early in the new year, to see whether a reversal of policy would serve American interests in the great power struggle with the Soviet Union.

135 Million Involved

THE 15 countries knocking at the door of the U. N. represent 135 million people. Most of them have waited outside for more than three years because of the quarrel over their admittance. A sixteenth, the new United States of Indonesia, will knock within a few weeks and may find itself excluded, too.

Those kept waiting in the anteroom, despite overwhelming support from the Assembly, are Italy, Austria, Ireland, Portugal, Finland, Jordan, Ceylon, Nepal and Korea. Those on the Soviet list are Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Albania and Outer Mongolia. The Finnish application has the support of both sides, but Russia will not let Finland enter unless all other candidates come in as well.

In consequence, the U. N. is unrepresentative and lopsided. In the Assembly just ended, the Latin Americans and the Arab states wielded inordinate power.

Latin America now has a third of all the votes in the Assembly; Europe has only a fifth, if one includes the Soviet satellites outside Russia, and less than a sixth if one takes western Europe alone. The under-representation of Europe is more damaging to the West than to the Russians, whose obstructiveness caused it.

Many times during the recent Assembly the United States and the western Europeans wished they had the votes of some of the European countries still denied admittance. And many times in the last three years there have been signs of a sense of isolation in the excluded countries, even from those in the west which do not normally suffer from persecution mania.

Charter Says No

FROM the American point of view, it is a handicap to have a big nation and a good friend like Italy excluded from the U. N. forum, unable to make its voice heard except through intermediaries, as the Italians did through their Latin-American friends on the disposal of their former colonies.

The recent Assembly repeatedly showed its sense of frustration at the absence of so many applicants for membership. By overwhelming votes it asked the Security Counsel to reconsider the applications of the countries on the Western list, although this was probably a futile gesture, since Russia can continue to veto their admission.

The Assembly also voted, 42 to 9, with six abstentions, to ask the World Court whether the Assembly could admit new members without waiting for the Security Council. But on this point the language of the Charter seems clear; that membership "will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council."

It is possible, of course, that before shifting its position the State Department will want to await a World Court opinion. But the Court is notoriously slow to move, and in any case the Russians have refused to acknowledge its authority.

The course that is gaining favor, especially among the "desk officers" of the State Department, is to admit the whole list, satellites and all, as the only way to make the U. N. the representative body it claims to be.

Record Is Irrelevant

SUCH a decision would go against the grain. For Hungary is the country that recently tried and jailed Cardinal Mindszenty; Bulgaria killed her opposition leader, Nikola Petkov, in what the United States officially branded as "judicial murder"; Bulgaria and Albania have been under U. N. censure for helping the guerillas in Greece, and nobody knows for sure whether Outer Mongolia qualifies for U. N. membership at all.

Yet the Charter does not rule out any member because its government happens to have an unsavory record. If it did, the Security Council acted illegally in admitting Yemen, where the institution of human slavery still prevails, or Afghanistan, where the observance of human rights is rough and primitive by Western standards.

Article 4 of the Charter lays down only two conditions: that, apart from the original signers, "membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations."

Now that the guerilla war against Greece is virtually over, it may be easier for the Unitel States to hold its nose, close its eyes, and vote for the admission of the Balkan satellites as "peace-loving states."

By consulting the record of the San Francisco Conference, the State Department may also give up its insistence that it is wrong to admit new members by a "deal." At San Francisco the United States persuaded the Conference to admit Argentina in exchange for admitting the Ukraine and Byelorussia.

It would take an accomplished State Department lawyer to prove that a deal admitting 10 members for 5 is any worse, except in size, than what was done at San Francisco under the State Department's own prompting.

Bulgarian Election Will Follow Script

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

BULGARIA is all set to prove how wild it is about communism.

The proof will come next Sunday in the form of elections—elections which have been prepared with amazing thoroughness to show "Anglo-American imperialists" that they can neither "put an end to socialism in our country" nor "separate us from the Soviet Union."

And a good show it should be. First scheduled for November 27, the elections were put off to December 18 because further preparations were found necessary to assure a record turnout.

The elections themselves are important in that 239 deputies will be named to Bulgaria's first popularly elected National Assembly. Yet overshadowing this is Bulgaria's pre-election efforts to establish foolproof control of all voters.

Suffrage 'Broadened'

FIRST of all, the election system has been broadened on what is described as "a new and democratic basis such as had never before been known in our country." One Communist commentator explained:

" . . . The former system deprived the following citizens of the right to vote: military persons on active duty, civilians called under the flag, policemen, forest police, frontier police, beggars and gypsies without fixed domicile, brothel owners, and state officials.

"The (new) electoral system contains only one such provision: that persons with fascist and antinational tendencies cannot be elected, since in a people's democracy there is no room for such elements in social life."

This clarifies what otherwise is buried in legalism—that hereafter only devotees of the Communist Fatherland Front can hold office.

Person to Person

IN A PARALLEL operation, the Fatherland Front organized an unprecedented person-to-person campaign of political indoctrination. "Responsible persons" were sent to every hamlet to "confer" with every eligible voter up to the moment of balloting. As for the cities and districts, Stara Zagora reported in mid-November that 3180 propagandists were participating in pre-election meetings. In the Asenovgrad District alone, more than 200 "successful" pre-election rallies had been held up to that time.

The Asenovgrad report revealed, however, that many "mistaken" political views were found among the people. But other statements indicated that Sofia is now fully prepared to deal with political illiterates through "instructors" whose only concern is results.

In exploiting every conceivable angle, the Sofia regime has dropped all pretense about the so-called party triumph in last May's municipal elections. Instead, the May setback is being used to warn that purges will follow should a similar party "deterioration" occur next Sunday.

Details of last May's election results are still being withheld by party leaders. Nevertheless, it is known that in at least 25 villages another election was called in August to "correct" the balloting.

Young Bulgarian Communists march through Ninth of September Square in Sofia, past a huge poster bearing the likenesses of the Fatherland Front's two heroes—the late Prime Minister Georgi Dimitrov and the living Stalin. The Fatherland Front intends to "sew up" the country for communism next Sunday

Mostly to avoid repetition of such political defiance, the Bulgarian government has also divided the country into county-like districts. Next Sunday, the people will be given the added duty of chosing 239 councilors to administer the new districts in line with party dictates.

The two-part election, according to Foreign Minister Vladimir Poptemov, is of international significance because it will show the world that Bulgaria will not be undermined by "spies and agents, and conspiracy aided by intervention from abroad . . ."

Through no coincidence, the Bulgarian government dramatized the declaration last week by finally opening the treason trial of former Vice Premier Traicho Kostov. The trial is being used as both a grim stimulant to voters and a warning to government officials.

The Sofia hierarchy also pushed through a new law covering "crimes" of government officials. Its effect is to make them completely subservient to the party under threat of a frame-up on one of the many new charges possible under the measure.

Bevin Has Big Plans for Ceylon Conference

By Jon Kimche

LONDON (ONA).—The conference of British Commonwealth Foreign Ministers, which will take place January 7 at Colombo, Ceylon, is planned to be the crowning achievement of Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, it is learned.

The Commonwealth ministers will be asked to lay down a foreign policy on three main issues. For all practical purposes, such a policy will also be that of the next British government, to be chosen in the 1950 parliamentary election, whether Laborites or Conservatives receive a mandate.

The first issue is future relations with Communist regions of the Far East, particularly insofar as this affects Southeast Asia. This is not a question of recognizing Communist China. That issue has already been decided affirmatively by Britain and most of the Commonwealth countries. It is the larger issue of what follows recognition that worries the Commonwealth—particularly Australia, New Zealand, India and Pakistan.

The second important issue, which was raised by Pakistan, is the situation in the Middle East. Pakistan wants an agreed general policy for the Commonwealth on future relations with the Arab states, in case of another Israel-Arab conflict or Soviet infiltration into the Middle East.

The third main issue to be discussed is the Commonwealth attitude to a United Europe and Britain's role in that project. As New Zealand will be represented by the relatively conservative new government, the Foreign Office is understood to be uncertain how the dominions, particularly New Zealand, will react to the suggestion that Britain be integrated more closely into Europe.

The Gallup Poll

Man Is Pronounced Fitter, Not Happier

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE human race is getting better from the standpoint of health and knowledge, in the opinion of the average American. But it is showing no improvement in moral conduct, peace of mind, religious faith or inner happiness.

That, in brief, is the way the typical American sizes up his fellow human beings.

In three weeks, half of the twentieth century will be over. To see whether people think things are getting better or worse as history marches on, the institute had its interviewers put this question to a cross-section of United States voters:

"Do you think the human race is getting better or worse from the standpoint of health? Knowledge? Moral conduct? Faith in religion? Peace of mind? Inner happiness?"

Here is the way they voted:

	Better	Worse	No Diff.	No Opin.
Health	73%	18%	6%	3%
Knowledge	82	7	7	4
Moral conduct	20	52	22	6
Faith in religion	33	42	18	7
Peace of mind	17	62	11	10
Inner happiness	21	51	18	10

These views, of course, may be challenged by historians and philosophers. However, the fact that a high percentage of the public is in substantial agreement that "inner happiness" and "peace of mind" are not improving with the passage of time, may be extremely revealing about the state of mind of people in this country today.

One interesting sidelight of the survey is that people who have had the most education are the most pessimistic about any improvement in "inner happiness," "peace of mind" or "faith in religion."

However, the best educated think the human race is definitely better from the standpoint of knowledge and health.

As will be noted from the table below in respect to "peace of mind," 74 percent of the persons who went to college believe that the human race is getting worse whereas only 57 percent of those who went only to grade school hold this opinion.

'PEACE OF MIND'

	Better	Worse	No Diff.	No Opin.
College	16%	74%	6%	4%
High School	18	63	11	8
Grade School	17	57	13	13

Another interesting sidelight of this survey appears in the analysis of the views of younger people versus older people. Although the younger people might be expected to hold more optimistic views than their parents, actually they are just about as pessimistic about progress in respect to "moral conduct" as those who are a generation older.

Currency Quirk Hurts Flagging Port of Antwerp

BRUSSELS (ONA).—There is mounting anxiety in Belgian maritime circles over the future of this country's chief port, Antwerp. Its future has been been more than ever jeopardized by the devaluation of the Belgian franc by 12½ percent while the Dutch guilder was lowered in value by 30 percent.

The upshot of that disparity in the currency devaluation of the two contiguous nations is that the wages of longshoremen and others engaged in harbor services are substantially lower at Rotterdam than at Antwerp. For example, Rotterdam employers of stevedores pay their workers the equivalent of about 35 cents an hour whereas the Antwerp hourly rate, because of the smaller currency devaluation here, is about $1. Thus, under normal circumstances, it is incomparably cheaper today to load, unload and store freight in the Dutch port than at Antwerp.

Upheaval in China Is 'Country Seizing the City'

By William Lewisohn

AFTER eight months' residence in Peking under the new Communist regime, the chief impression left on one is of an entirely new phenomenon, never seen in China before. Whereas the previous revolutions in modern times, such as the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty in 1911 and the overthrow of the Republic by the Nationalists in 1928, were merely political revolutions, the present events are a social upheaval of the most deep-going kind.

In the first place, the Communist rulers are of an entirely new type. Most of them had never before taken part in official life. They are, in the widest sense, "new men," who have taken their political and economic theories, not from the traditions or history of their country, but from those practiced in Russia. In the second place, it is the avowed aim of the Chinese Communist Party to destroy root and branch the old political and social system in China, and to build up a new form of society based on the most extreme Marxist principles.

Another interesting feature of the present upheaval in China is that while the urban commercial and financial interests had hitherto been the controlling power in Chinese politics, today it is the countryside that has seized power and has, so to speak, conquered the cities. This, by the way, has faced the new rulers with some of their most difficult problems which, one cannot help suspecting, they were not altogether prepared for.

It has been claimed by certain circles outside China that the Chinese Communist Party is not really Communist, but is some kind of radical reform party whose main platform is a more equitable distribution of the land. This is to misread the present situation in China completely. As they have been in control of large sections of the countryside for a long time, they have already carried out their so-called land reform policy there, but at no time have they ever renounced a single one of their Marxist principles. It was merely that up to the end of 1948 they were not in possession of any of the larger cities or important trade centers, so that it was not generally realized that they would carry through their totalitarian theories and methods in the towns as well as in the country.

A further development that has come as a surprise to many observers is the way the Chinese Communist government—as I shall call it, despite the name it has been pleased to adopt of "Chinese People's Democratic Republic"—has thrown in its lot with Russia, not only in accepting the Marxist principles as practiced there, but also in its foreign policy.

It was known that a struggle had been going on behind the scenes in the Communist Party between the extremists, on the one hand, who desired the closest cooperation with Russia against the so-called "imperialist-capitalist" countries of the West, and the moderates, on the other, who favored friendly, if quite platonic, relations with those countries, if only for economic reasons. From some of his earlier announcements, it seemed at first that Mao Tse-tung, chairman of the party, leaned toward the latter policy. It was said that he favored some kind of "national Chinese communism" as against the international type of the Cominform.

Early last summer there were rumors that Chou En-lai, the present Prime Minister, had secretly tried to approach the United States, to find out on what terms it would be possible to come to some practical working agreement, but that his attempt had been betrayed by one of his subordinates and that he had been speedily brought to heel. However that may be, Mao himself suddenly veered round to an uncompromising pro-Russian policy, and in his declaration of July 1 announced his intention of "following the Russian line" completely, abused the "imperialist powers," the United States and Britain, and belittled the value of any financial or economic assistance they might have been able to render. What actually induced him to change his mind remains unknown.

At present the pro-Russian extremists are in power. For some weeks prior to the inauguration of the new government, Russian advisers of every kind had been pouring into Peking, and by October there must have been 300 or 400 of them there. It may be added that they and, no doubt, the nationals of other Communist states, if there are any such in Peking, were the only foreigners who had any intercourse, either socially or officially, with the Chinese Communists. Russia and other Cominform states have already recognized the new government in China.

'Benefits' of Recognition

TWO views exist among foreigners in China on this question of recognition. It is perhaps unnecessary to stress that it is de jure recognition that is in question; the Chinese Communist government is not interested in, nor would it accept, anything short of that.

One view is that recognition might be quite a good thing. Its upholders claim that once recognition was granted there would be communication between their consular representatives and the higher Communist authorities, which might help to settle many outstanding questions. They also believe that the government would then let up somewhat in the enforcement of its autarchic and nationalizing principles. This latter argument, however, is mere surmise, where the wish is father to the thought.

The other larger group holds the view that nothing is to be gained by rushing in to recognize the new regime. They do not believe that it would induce the Communists to modify any of their extreme theories or even to relax their present restrictive regulations on foreign trade. Moreover, it is pointed out that the Communist government is anxious for recognition by foreign states other than those of a Communist complexion, not from any liking for the western democracies or because they expect any benefits from them economically, but simply for reasons of prestige. As long as the greater part of the world does not recognize them, they are losing a certain amount of face among their own people.

Recognition, therefore, could be regarded as a kind of bargaining point, if perhaps not a very strong one, in order to obtain guarantees of future good behavior, such as the recognition of existing treaties, more reasonable regulations for foreign trade and better treatment of foreign nationals residing in Communist China. It is true that in the opinion of many observers such guarantees would have little real value. On the other hand, it seems unlikely that if President Mao made some public declaration on the above lines, the government would fail to live up to it. But how he is to go back on his previous criticisms of the western powers is not easy to see.

A Self-Blockade

FOREIGN trade in China at present is in a parlous state. The apologists of the present regime there ascribe this entirely to the civil war which is still going on and to the blockade of the Chinese coast by Kuomintang war vessels and planes. This, however, is only partly true.

Tientsin, which since the collapse of Shanghai has become the leading port in North China, has seen no fighting for the last nine months, while the Kuomintang blockade has been ineffective there. Although admittedly Tientsin is still doing a small volume of trade, it is a mere trickle compared to the trade of even two or three years ago. The fact is that the main hindrances to foreign trade are the vexatious, and one might almost say punitive, regulations against foreign business enforced by the Communist authorities.

The saying with which many foreign businessmen try to comfort their fears, that "China must have foreign trade," is not entirely convincing. It is conceivable that a Communist government run by extremists, in pursuit of their Marxist theories, might be prepared to throw a wall round China, cutting her off from the rest of the world—except Russia and the other countries of the Cominform—and revert to a purely agricultural economy, with its low standard of living.

From the press and the speeches of their public men, it is already clear that the Communists envisage an entirely self-supporting China, independent of the outside world. Indeed, some of the leaders have gone as far as to tell the Chinese public that the United States and Britain need Chinese products much more than China needs theirs.

One thing is already clear: the Communist government intends to carry through a policy of autarchy and nationalization of commerce and industry. In pursuit of this policy it aims to oust all foreign commercial and industrial activities in China. Whether this policy will be carried out at once or gradually, and on what future lines Communist China will trade with the West, only time can tell. But all the larger foreign firms in Tientsin and Shanghai are already suffering severely, and many of them are running at a heavy loss owing to the present restrictive trade policy.

Closing Discouraged

ON the other hand, under present conditions foreign firms have found it almost impossible to cut their losses by closing up. If they wish to do so, they are forced to pay fantastic sums in compensation to their employes, or alternatively are faced with the confiscation of their properties. Moreover, there have been numerous cases where the workers have stepped in and prevented the foreign staff from leaving.

The outlook for the foreign banks would appear to be no better. The Communist government has been conducting its exchange business with foreign countries through a Belgian and a French bank. But when recognition is granted, the government undoubtedly will establish its own branches in foreign capitals, and foreign banks in China will be cut out altogether.

There remains the question of the attitude of Communist China toward neighboring countries. Ever since the occupation of Peking last January, the press has been full of articles attacking British, Dutch, French and even Indian "imperialism" and declaring that China will not neglect her Communist friends in adjoining countries which are being "exploited by the imperialist powers." Members of the Communist Party have repeatedly told other Chinese that the war will not end with the overthrow of the Kuomintang, but will be carried on till their armies reach Singapore or Manila. For this, they say, is not simply a Chinese revolutionary movement, but a revolution of the whole of Asia.

Hongkong would not appear to be in any immediate danger. It seems highly unlikely that the Chinese Communists will try and take it by force. More probably, they will try to stir up trouble inside the colony by strikes and boycotts until British administration becomes impossible.

As soon as the Communist armies reach the western frontiers of China, the Chinese government undoubtedly will give direct support to the armed Communist forces in revolt in Indo-China, Burma and possibly Malaya, with a view to establishing Communist governments in those countries, and thus be able to exercise the same kind of suzerainty over them as existed in the days of the Manchu Dynasty. In Korea they are hardly likely to interfere, as this would bring them into conflict with their Russian friends.

In general, it may be said that present events in China are full of menace, not only to foreign trade, but also to the whole position of the United States and Britain in the Far East.

William Lewisohn, the author of this article, has lived in China 40 of his 65 years. He has been a China correspondent for the Times of London since 1940, and was the last foreign correspondent to leave Peking. He left September 30, and is now en route to London.

Tito Revolt Seems to Have Abated Trieste 'Problem'

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

TRIESTE—One of the weirdest domans ever created by man in his efforts to solve complicated political problems by drawing arbitrary lines on a map, is the so-called Free Territory of Trieste.

The territory is a small slab of Adriatic real estate about half the size of Rhode Island, between Italy, its most recent proprietor, and Yugoslavia, its most clamorous claimant.

It is stuffed with nearly 400,000 people, of whom 350,000 are, or claim to be, as Italian as chianti. The rest are as Slav as slivovitz. The result is an explosive ethnological cocktail.

The territory, however, was bound to have a polyglot population. The political cartographers could not help themselves there. But they might have given some thought to the area's capacity for self-sufficiency. In this respect the lines could not have been drawn more carelessly if the mapmakers had been blindfolded.

To begin with, Trieste itself, except for brief moments of prosperity when it was the pampered pet of the landlocked Austro-Hungarian empire, could not pay its way as a port. The trade of the Danube basin had long begun to flow northward to Hamburg, Gdynia and Rotterdam by the time Italy acquired it after World War I. Huge subsidies kept Trieste going throughout Italy's rule.

The territory's boundaries as drawn, furthermore, deprived Trieste of power from the hydroelectric plants in the upper Isonzo River valley, of coal from the Istrian mines, of shortline rail and road links with Vienna and the Danube basin and of much-needed food from the farm hinterland.

The territory, in other words, could not achieve even a workable minimum of self-sufficiency. To keep it going, the United States has been obliged to pour proportionately more money into the area than anywhere else in the whole European Recovery Program.

Marshall Plan aid to Trieste in 1949 has totaled 18 million dollars, or roughly $60 for each and every Triestine man, woman and child, more than three times the $18.50 average per head for the citizens of other ERP regions.

In spite of the money poured into this place to revive port activity, reactivate the bombed shipyards and repair the wrecked refineries, unemployment has only been reduced from a high of 32,000 in 1947 to an official 18,000, which is probably really nearer 25,000 in a Triestine population of only 300,000.

Triumph for Russia

WHY DID the United States sign the Italian peace treaty which created the free territory in the first place? It could not help itself.

The free territory came into being after nearly two years of Big Four haggling over the Italian treaty and disposition of the disputed port, while Anglo-American and Yugoslav forces made belligerent faces across Trieste's barbed wire barricades and the city's Italian and Slav residents mauled and murdered one another.

Russia tried hard to give Trieste, its first-class port, its shipyards and refineries and most of its Istrian hinterland to Yugoslavia, then a Soviet pet. The United States, Britain and France vigorously insisted on letting Italy keep the port and as much as possible of the surrounding country, rich in coal and other minerals, water power and food.

Just when it seemed that World War III might break out in Trieste, the Paris peacemakers, among them then Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, came up with the free territory solution. They called it a "compromise." Actually, it represented a major victory for Russian diplomacy.

The free territory idea, however, rang reasonably in many ears at the time. Trieste was a smoldering fuse in the West-East powder keg. Better that it be drawn, men of goodwill believed, before it was too late. On paper, the scheme did just that.

Briefly, it designated the 285 square miles between Duino and Cittanuova, comprising Trieste, as an area eventually to be ruled by a governor appointed by the United Nations and to be "held in trust," until then, by the United States, Britain and Yugoslavia.

But the governor was never appointed. The Security Council could not agree on a candidate. It soon became obvious, too, that Tito had no intention of maintaining the ethnological status quo in Zone B, which contained approximately 100,000 citizens, about half of them Italian. Political and police pressure forced thousands of Italians out of homes and jobs and into the Anglo-American zone.

It became increasingly apparent to everyone concerned that the free territory idea, finally, was economically unworkable. In March, 1948, the United States, Britain and France proposed to the Soviets that the Italian treaty be revised to permit the return of the Free Territory of Trieste to its former owners.

Yugoslavia yelped and Italy cheered, but Russia was curiously undemonstrative. It did not agree to the Anglo-American proposal, but it did nothing to support Yugoslavia's claims. It had, at last, been outsmarted.

Russia could not, at the time, do more than insist that the terms of the original Italian treaty be carried out. There was an important election campaign on in Italy in which the fortunes of the Communist Party were at stake. To have opposed the Anglo-American proposal too strongly might have antagonized Italian Communists, for Trieste is as dear to them as to the most chauvinistic of nationalists.

Everyone, now, is suddenly disinclined to do anything about "solving" the Trieste problem. The United States and Britain have no intention of pulling out. The Italians, who holler "Viva Trieste Italiana" and demand the port's prompt return to Italian sovereignty whenever they have nothing better to do, are secretly glad to have those 10,000 Yanks and Tommies parked in the eastern crescent of the Adriatic between them and whatever may come from the east.

And, judging from the downturn in Yugoslav agitation for possession of the city they call Trst, Belgrade is not too unhappy about the presence of the Anglo-Americans here.

Some day, of course, Trieste, with its magnificent port, clattering shipyards, smelly refineries and its probably incurable insolvency, will be returned lock, stock and deficit to Italy. But that "someday," everyone admits, has suddenly been projected into an indefinite future. No one dares even to guess when it might be.

The reason for this new and officially unacknowledged state of affairs is Tito's break with the Kremlin. Tito expects to be attacked by Russia, not directly in an all-out war, but by Russian-instigated guerillas from Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria and Greece.

The Anglo-American troops at his back are, for Tito, a sort of insurance policy. They guarantee him from attack by Cominformists from the direction of Trieste, and they might be drawn into his own conflict with the Soviets.

The military position of the Anglo-Americans, on the other hand, has been improved by Tito's split with Stalin. Tito's neutrality in the event of a West-East shooting war is almost a certainty, whereas before the Cominform bounced Tito the Americans and the British were sitting ducks in a Communist lake.

The Belgrade-Moscow break, furthermore, has practically wrecked bullet-headed little Vittorio Vidali's Triestine Communist Party. With a claimed membership of some 30,000, it virtually controlled the dockworkers and seamen's unions, which could and in the past did cripple the port at will, interrupting the flow of ECA aid to Austria and western Germany and fomenting Italo-Slav friction.

Titoists accounted for less than 3 percent of the Communist votes in the summer local elections, but their strength is now said to be far greater than the results indicated. Vidali, Palmiro Togliatti's right bower, former labor agitator in the United States and Kremlin-crafted bullyboy, has not been able to pull off a successful strike in months.

Every time the Communists strike, they lose hundreds of members. Most shift over to the anti-Communist Camera Confederale del Lavoro, composed of Christian Democrats, Republicans and Socialists, 50,000 strong and growing.

In Trieste, as elsewhere, the Cominformist tide that flowed westward so strongly throughout the early postwar years has receded. But in Trieste, Tito's defection from the Cominform is probably almost as much responsible as ECA, the presence of 10,000 Anglo-American troops, a firm Western policy and a constabulary of 6000 Venezia Giulia police—a cop for every 50 inhabitants.

Trieste, however, continues to live in uncertainty. Its citizens know that once Marshall aid ends, the shipyards may close down and the flow of food, fuel and raw materials through the port to Vienna and western Germany may end. More Triestini—Italians and Slavs—than election results and chauvinistic editorials in the press would indicate, wish that the Americans and the British would stay here forever.

There is less confidence in the future here than in any area I have visited since last March. It is reflected particularly in what Bob Galloway, the Memphis-born head of the ECA mission here, and the Allied Military Government find an irritating reluctance on the part of Italian capitalists to invest in Trieste's economic future by building and expanding business and industry.

Outwardly, Trieste is gay enough with schmaltzy music and, for those who can afford it, good food and more nightclub fun than anywhere this side of Paris. But in the narrow back streets of this rundown, Austro-Hungarian version of Venice, there are few smiling, well-fed faces. There are only hungry, jobless men and women vaguely aware of Trieste's prosperous past, alive to its penurious present and anxious about its uncertain future.

Reporter's Scoop on Wrights' First Flight Got Editorial Brushoff

By Harry P. Moore

NORFOLK, VA.—On December 17, 1903, just 46 years ago next Saturday, Orville and Wilbur Wright, in a flimsy, glider-like machine powered by a feeble motor, proved to a disbelieving world that man could fly in a heavier-than-air machine.

It was in the summer of 1900 that the two young men from Dayton, Ohio, first landed from a sailboat on the barren sand dunes of Kitty Hawk, N. C., bringing with them several mysterious boxes and canvas bags. The suspicious inhabitants of the North Carolina banks at first refused them lodgings, but they were finally taken in by the wife of William J. Tate, keeper of a lighthouse at Coinjock, N. C.

The two strangers had not been long on the banks before even the Tates looked upon them with suspicion. Their antics on the beach were simply incredible.

They would gaze for hours at seagulls in flight, and flap their arms in imitation. Sometimes they performed a queer ritual with a little instrument which spun rapidly when the wind was blowing. The Tates and their neighbors would watch these goings-on at a safe distance and shake their heads.

Man-Eating Kite

THEN one day the pair unpacked a strange contrivance from their canvas bags. It looked like a big box kite with a platform on which a man could stretch out at full length.

They took this monstrosity to Kill Devil Hill, 5 miles from the Tate home. From time to time the few inhabitants of the place would see the two trying to get their contrivance into the air and even to ride it. Occasionally the thing flopped to the side of a sand hill, but Wilbur and Orville always repaired it.

After two months the Wrights packed their belongings and returned to Dayton. The Tates and their neighbors breathed sighs of relief.

But the brothers came back in 1901 with a stronger and large box kite.

This time the natives and life-savers at the Kitty Hawk Station began to treat them with a friendly though amused tolerance. The life savers—now known as Coast Guardsmen — even helped them haul their glider up the long hill. Simple fellows, these Wrights. Haul their kite up the hill just to push it off again.

Orville's Turn

THEY came back in 1902 and built a hangar on the sand with sleeping quarters for themselves.

"They are going to sleep with that darned thing now," the natives whispered.

The Wrights went back to Ohio in the spring of 1902, but they returned again in 1903 and remained until winter. This time they made several successful flights in their now numerous gliders. Only two or three were damaged in landings.

They were getting close to the secret of the sea gulls. Even the inhabitants began to change their minds.

The Wrights spent December 12 and 13 installing a 3-horsepower motor, taken from a small boat, in one of the gliders. They planned to make the first attempt to fly the motor-driven machine on December 14, but the day broke stormy.

They were taking turns trying out their invention, and it would have been Wilbur's "first go." December 15 was Orville's turn, and December 16 Wilbur's again. So Orville was in line when December 17 dawned fair, with a 21-mile-an-hour wind.

That wind and the sputtering motor, lifted the crude plane into the air for 15 seconds and carried it 165 feet. Orville Wright had flown.

Editors Skeptical

IT WAS my good fortune to get the first information of the Wrights' success. I had followed their operations for almost three years. But when I sent queries to out-of-town newspapers, asking whether they would buy the story of this historic event, most of them gave me the cold shoulder. They simply didn't believe a man could fly.

Professor Langley only a few days before had made his ill-fated attempt to fly from a barge in the Potomac River, and the skeptics were having a field day of "I-told-you-sos." The managing editor of a newspaper in the Wrights' home State sent me this message in reply to my query: "We don't want any cock and bull yarn like that."

The Ohio newspaper even refused to pay for the query I had sent. It cost 22 cents.

But the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, on which I was employed, the New York Journal, The Washington Post, the Chicago Inter-Ocean and the Philadelphia Record bought a few hundred words. The Virginian-Pilot and the New York Journal were the only ones which played up the story on the front page. The others hid it away as if they, too, doubted its accuracy.

I obtained the story by keeping tab on the Wrights for almost three years and making friends with the life savers at Kitty Hawk, who were the only persons in the inventors' confidence. The Wrights never knew I was a newspaperman.

I got my first tip that the inventors were at Kitty Hawk when a native came to Norfolk on an errand for the Wrights. They wanted some Lynnhaven oysters, and the native was sent here to buy a barrel.

I talked to this man in a Norfolk restaurant. He told me there were "two loony Yankees" down at Kitty Hawk trying to learn to fly.

"They want to eat some Lynnhaven oysters before they die," he joked. "They have already busted two of their flying machines and the next thing they bust probably will be their heads."

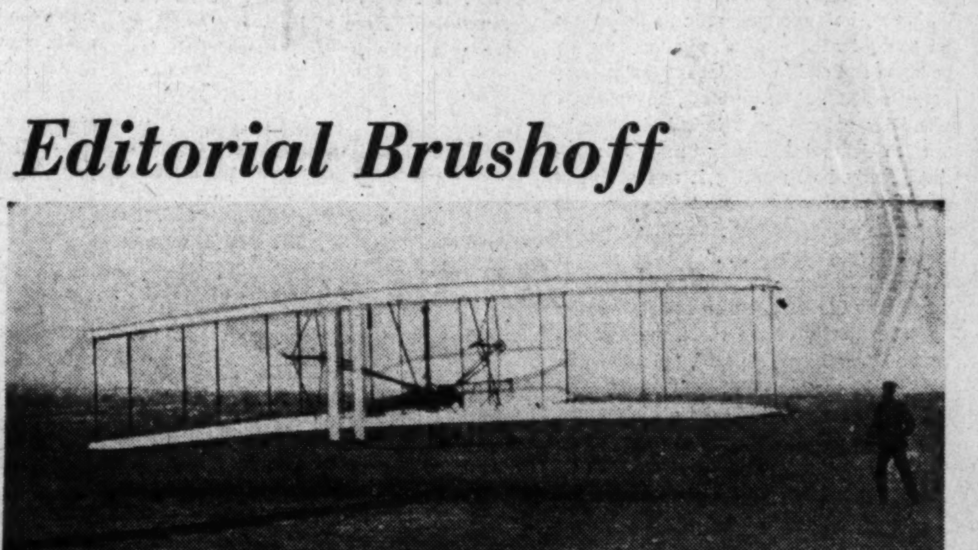
The life savers from one end of the North Carolina coast to the other were my friends. I went down to Kitty Hawk and arranged with the life savers there to keep me informed about the inventors. Nobody expected them actually to fly, of course.

On the morning of December 17, 1903, I got word from my friends that the Wrights had "gone up" in their machine.

"One of them flew just like a bird," my informant told me. "They put a gasoline engine in the thing, and after it glided down the side of the hill on a wooden track, it went up. Everybody thought Orville Wright would be killed, but he landed on the sand and is all right."

After I had sent a brief story to the five out-of-town newspapers that ordered it, the Wrights received telegrams from editors requesting more details. They were offered considerable money for their own exclusive story. The Wrights refused. Wilbur even denied that a flight had been made.

It was 9 o'clock that night before the Wrights confirmed the story. They sent a brief message to their sister in Dayton informing her of their success.



Orville Wright's first flight, at 10 a. m. on December 17, 1903. His brother Wilbur is shown running along the beach

Jerusalem Gesture

A curious mixture of sentiment and power politics seems to have brought about the vote of 38 to 14 in the United Nations General Assembly for administration of the Jerusalem area by the Trusteeship Council. Obviously the Arab bloc supported the resolution because it means a setback for the hope of Israel to retain the New City as Israeli territory. Apparently the Soviet bloc gave its blessing to international control as a means of currying favor among the Arab states. And many of the Latin-American countries voted the same way in the hope of keeping the Holy Places under international control.

The tragic aspect of the Assembly's action is that it has no relation to realities. The Old City is occupied by the Jordanians and they are as bitterly opposed to relinquishing it to international trusteeship as are the Israeli to giving up the New City. Both flatly told the Assembly's Special Political Committee that they would not accept U. N. administration over Jerusalem. The Assembly recklessly reaffirmed its resolution of 1947 without giving the slightest indication as to how it might be put into effect. As a matter of fact, there is no means of enforcing the decision and the resolution becomes a sort of futile gesture that will complicate the task of working out an amicable solution.

The decision was quite unnecessary because both Israel and Jordan had offered to give guarantees regarding protection of the Holy Places as well as free access to them. Israel's Foreign Minister, Moshe Sharett, had also agreed to accept a Dutch-Swedish proposal for United Nations jurisdiction over the Holy Places alone. As we have pointed out before, such an international curatorship over spots that are sacred to Christians, Jews and Moslems alike would be a proper undertaking for the U. N.

There seems to be no doubt that the U. N. could accomplish this limited objective, which would protect every legitimate international interest in Jerusalem, without upsetting the solution of the larger problem that events have brought about. The contrary policy that the Assembly has imposed on the Trusteeship Council, with so little regard for the "vibrant realities," does no credit to the U. N. and is a guarantee only of future headaches in dealing with this thorny problem.

Atomic Reappraisal

Canada's exceedingly able representative on the U. N. Atomic Energy Commission, Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton, recently made some pertinent remarks which we hope his United States counterpart overheard. Speaking before the St. Andrews Society of Baltimore, he suggested ever so delicately and gently that the Baruch plan may not be the alpha and omega of international atomic energy control. The problem, he noted, is essentially political, not technical. Therefore the General Assembly turned to a political method of meeting it and set up a special committee "to meet together and consult in order to determine if there exists a basis for agreement . . ."

General McNaughton had no thought of disparaging the Baruch plan as approved by a great majority of the U. N. member nations. It continues, he said, "to commend itself to the conscience of the world." And he paid his respects to Soviet obduracy and isolation in rejecting it and to the total inadequacy of the initial Soviet counterproposal. He pointed out, however, that "already there has been some development in the Soviet position."

This development is not negligible and should not be ignored. At first, the Russians took the position that they would not even discuss control until all atomic weapons had been prohibited and actually destroyed. Then they conceded the need for some system of international control and subsequently that this control would necessarily entail international inspection. Recently there has come from Mr. Vishinsky some definition of the type of inspection—"periodic" rather than "continuous"—acceptable to his country. So far as the majority is concerned, said General McNaughton, it has "moved a long way from some of the ideas put forward originally in the Baruch proposals for a highly centralized agency, autocratic and powerful, and self-contained with power of 'condign' punishment."

So perhaps there is the beginning of an approach to common ground. Agreement is attainable, of course, only if there is a genuine common desire for agreement. And it is certainly not yet clear that the Russians really want to end the atomic arms race. The first business of diplomacy should be to find out with certainty what they really want. To this end, according to General McNaughton, "it is the intention of the majority to reexamine the Soviet proposals in the light of statements which have been made recently by their principal representatives so as to make abundantly certain that no misunderstanding of their intent should stand in the way of agreement."

If the United States and the U. S. S. R. both want to see a system of control established, there is no doubt that patient negotiation can work out a system that will be mutually satisfactory.

Nature Of The Crisis

On this page from time to time we have had occasion to lament both the general absence of good manners and the extremely low intellectual level of the debates at Lake Success, especially those having to do with points of contention between the East and the West. Sometimes these debates have degenerated into exchanges of invective and abuse that would have shocked and disgusted an eighteenth century Billingsgate fishwife. The Colombian delegate, Dr. Fernando Londono y Londono, has said that the debates remind him of nothing so much as "vociferous altercations of Parisian taxicab drivers."

In such a context the recent speech of the Lebanese delegate, Dr. Charles Malik, before the General Assembly seems all the more remarkable. The occasion was the discussion of the Soviet proposal for a new five-power peace pact. Now Dr. Malik, who is also the Minister of Lebanon to the United States, is well known here in Washington, and in learned circles generally, as one of the foremost contemporary philosophic minds. It was as a philosopher rather than as a statesman that he undertook to analyze the basic causes of conflict between the bourgeois West and the communistic East.

The real danger to peace, Dr. Malik said, has arisen not only because communism is by both nature and doctrine an aggressive force but also because of a degeneracy within Western society itself and an absence of the moral and intellectual leadership necessary in such a crisis as the present. There are, he observed—> many phases of Western life which are repulsively materialistic. The spirit of business and gain, the maddening variety of things exciting your concupiscence, the utter selfishness of uncoordinated activity—all this is not something to attract and inspire. To the superficial observer . . . there is little to choose between the soulless materialism of the West and the militant materialism of the East. There is a general weakening of moral fiber. One gains an impression that the great fund of moral strength handed down from the tears and labor of the ages is not being creatively replenished . . . Quality is in eclipse; quantity and size dominate. Not the better and the truer, but the larger and physically stronger; these call forth moral approbation . . .

There is, meanwhile, Dr. Malik believes, an unwillingness in the West to recognize the disorder and to take means to correct it. The West now appears to be incapable of breeding the sort of leaders who would be capable of weathering such a crisis. The very character of the debates in the General Assembly, observed Dr. Malik, testify to this spiritual sterility.

> The complaint is often made that debates in the United Nations degenerate into "propaganda." . . . If there is propaganda it is only because there is on the other hand ideological impotence. The tragedy of the world today is that the traditions which embody the deepest truth are not bothering . . . to articulate themselves . . . Man thirsts after ideas. If your only export in these realms is the silent example of flourishing political institutions and happy human relations, you cannot lead. If your only export is a distant reputation for wealth and prosperity and order, you cannot lead. Nor can you really lead if you send forth to others only expert advice and technical assistance. To be able to lead and to save yourself and others, you must above everything address their mind and soul.

However, the great advantage of the West is that it retains the means of its own regeneration. Here at least—> the university is free, the church is free. It is a great thing to preserve unbroken the tradition of free inquiry started by Plato and Aristotle, and the tradition of Love started by God. And this fact alone is going to save us. It will not be by pacts or by atomic bombs or by economic arrangements . . .

Then, turning to Mr. Vishinsky and the Communist delegates, Dr. Malik warned them that—

> . . . Communism is a doctrine of despair . . . If the Western World can show a way to eradicate the shame and scandal of poverty, of exploitation, of oppression, of greed, without resort to social revolution and class struggle and dictatorship, if it can place these material values within their proper place within the context of a mighty spiritual movement which will be revolutionary without being subversive and which will draw its substance from the infinite riches of the Western positive tradition, then the necessity for communism will vanish, and the specter which now walks the earth will be laid forever.

Mr. Thomas' Sentence

The prison sentence and fine imposed on Representative J. Parnell Thomas is a fitting, though mild, punishment for the crime of petty thievery of which he is guilty. There is no really fitting punishment, however, for betrayal of the people who elected him to serve as their representative in Congress. For the sordid story of payroll padding shakes public confidence in the representative system of government and gives its enemies an opportunity to gloat over its shortcomings.

The great majority of American legislators are law-abiding citizens. Whatever their weaknesses and however mistaken their policies may be at times, they do not make their official positions a cover for illicit gain-getting. The shocked reaction to the disclosures about Mr. Thomas is a [illegible] recognition of the fact that legislators of his caliber are the rare exception, not the rule. This is the best answer that can be given to critics who mistakenly assume that the exposure of a few crooks is evidence of widespread corruption among the elected representatives of the people.

How Much Sugar?

December is the month in which Secretary Brannan has to decide how much sugar American mainland consumers require next year. Under the Sugar Act of 1948, he is instructed to fix a consumption quota that will protect the welfare of consumers as well as the domestic sugar industry. This consumption estimate also determines the amount of our sugar imports and affects the price of sugar. If the estimates are low, Cuba, the chief source of imported supplies, will have a low import quota and domestic prices will be higher. Contrariwise, a high quota raises imports and has a depressing effect on prices.

As expected, the Department of Agriculture is being bombarded with conflicting recommendations in regard to the size of the consumption quota. Spokesmen for industries benefiting from lower prices, such as bottlers of soft drinks, bakers and confectioners, and the representatives of consumer organizations, want the consumption quota raised, while spokesmen for domestic sugar growers oppose increases on the ground that sugar prices should be higher than they are at present.

Although the Sugar Act of 1948 sets forth a number of factors to be taken into account in determining consumption requirements, these are merely guides. Final decision rests with the Secretary of Agriculture. Will he yield to importunities to administer the Sugar Act as a device for raising the price of sugar, as he did last year, or increase the consumption estimate, thereby increasing sugar imports and giving consumers the benefit of lower prices?

The Sugar Act certainly was not intended to operate solely as a domestic price-raising device. Its purpose is to regulate commerce and safeguard the interests of consumers and the domestic industry alike. Moreover, domestic sugar producers are heavily subsidized by a system of conditional production payments and they benefit from the tariff levied on sugar imports. Since domestic sugar producers already have the double benefit of subsidies and tariffs, and even so, produce less than their assigned quotas, we fail to see why they should be given another concealed subsidy by imposing tight restrictions on sugar supplies in order to raise prices.

That the administration of the Sugar Act is highly restrictive in its effect on consumption is evidenced by the fact that during the past year our sugar supply was only 14 percent above the average for the five years 1935-39, and the per capita supply was below the level of that period. Meantime, consumer purchasing power has greatly expanded and over-all per capita food consumption is well above prewar levels. Tight consumption quotas also entail correspondingly heavy reductions in imports of sugar from Cuba, on which we depend for a considerable part of our sugar supplies. Consequently, an ultrarestrictive policy would be not only shortsighted from the viewpoint of our own long-range interests but it would "give the lie" to our professed desire to expand world trade by lowering trade barriers.

Art Of Retirement

With pensions for everybody becoming a leading issue of the day, the technique, science—or art—of retirement is engaging the attention of physicians, educators and sociologists. The common saying that death lies in wait for those who quit work has now been backed up by science, which finds retirement a "killer" for which curbs are needed as for cancer and tuberculosis. Three reasons why many persons succumb to physical, or at least mental, death in retirement were recently given by Dr. Alonzo F. Myers, head of New York University's department of education. People, he said, retire too late, too suddenly or without adequate preparation. Dr. Myers thinks education should accept the main challenge of preparing people for retirement. For this purpose he would have a new kind of school in which new interests could be developed and retraining given for new pursuits. Thus society could make use of the productive ability of the retired.

But the individual also has a responsibility to prepare early for retirement, both financially and psychologically. Otherwise the changed life he will have to lead on retirement may be too great a shock and he will lose the will to live or at least to continue useful and interested in life. The traditional idea that the best life for the elderly was that of a rocking chair has been blasted by both medicine and psychology. Gaining ground is the idea that the best life for anyone is usefulness—if possible to the end of one's days. This means that pensions are only a part of the answer for those who retire. Education to help everyone to prepare physically, financially, psychically and vocationally for the later years should be considered in any program for the Nation's increasing elderly population.

WITH QUIET TREAD

So dust creeps on its soft, grey trail,
Blows in a wind that is swift and pale,
Rises to heaven in wide, blue space,
Covers the earth's reluctant face.

Stones that grew into monuments
Went the way of the desert tents;
Nothing was ever too closely seamed
To bar the dust from the dead, who dreamed
Once, long ago, of a safe seclusion;
All of their dreams are proved delusion.

Strong and subtle, the dust moves on
And swallows up all that it rests upon.

Sex Crime Prevention

I was most interested in your December 5 story on Representative Chelf's proposed solution for the Nation's terrible problem of sex degenerates. I would like to point out that while the Representative's proposal was no doubt made in good faith and inspired by righteous indignation, it is somewhat in the nature of locking the barn after the horse has been stolen.

From personal observation of a case that presently remains unsolved in spite of continued pressure from the harassed mother, the father being a serviceman on duty overseas, I would say that what this Nation needs is not more destructive legislation, but some constructive measure providing institutional care for adolescent children that are known sex degenerates. I am quite sure that the one case of which I have personal knowledge is not the only one of its kind; but is probably representative of the Nation as a whole.

Increasing the punishment for a sex degenerate after he has committed a crime will not put life back in a dead child's body, nor will it make it safe for other children to go to and from school. What we need is specialized medical care for the overdeveloped sexual adolescents who as yet haven't committed some violent crime for which local authorities will willingly lock them up. Let's do something about prevention. Let's get at the cause and eliminate it.

Cardozo Crowding

I agree with Margaret Moore's statement in her December letter that education is meaningless unless it can develop enough character "to take the bitter with the sweet." Education is also worthless if it does not stimulate a quest for truth, if it does not imbed an appreciation for truth, or if it distorts the truth.

Although I do not know our pupil, Barbara Barnes, I cannot see that her November 29 letter about certain difficulties associated with Cardozo High School's overcrowding reflects on her character development. Do we not appreciate Abraham Lincoln's attainment more because his biography has made us aware of his adversities?

Under the status quo we teachers are doing the best we can to carry on our classroom, homeroom and extracurricular duties in order that society may receive useful citizens.

Voting Economy

When the Federal Government extracts 45 of the 200 billions of national income, to say nothing of the sums required for State and municipal government and when the Truman party evinces no real intent to cut down expenses, no wonder taxation has become the favorite topic of the day and "economizer" the favorite disguise of the legislator.

What is needed is an officially published record of congressional voting as Representative Hale Boggs of Louisiana proposes. But I would go farther. Voting machines should automatically record the vote of each Congressman on every motion, bill and amendment. That would save a world of legislative time and destroy a world of campaign camouflage. It would discourage the playing of both ends against the middle evidenced when Congress roared for economy and then appropriated more than the Budget Bureau requested.

Let us admit that two thirds of the budget is for (1) the service of the debt and (2) wars past and future. The latter properly includes all items for the recovery and arming of Europe.

This two thirds is not the fat part. Not much can be carved off without cutting into bone and muscle. But fat there is in the other 15 billions.

When daddy wrecks the family car (and budget) and goes to the hospital for a few months, is that a time for the children to ride to school in taxis, neglect to switch off lights in empty rooms and leave hot-water faucets running? No, sir! When an inescapable expense creates a problem, the more imperative it is to make the little economies which can be made.

Women Lawyers

On December 5, you published a very nice story about me, for which I wish to thank you.

However, there was one statement which I would like to correct. The story stated that I was the only woman member of the Montgomery County Bar Association. At this time there are four women actively engaged in the practice of law in this county and members of the Bar Association, all of whom are, in my opinion, and in the opinion of others, thoroughly competent and successful.

Foreign Gift Postage

Anyone who has generous impulses to send a gift abroad finds them subjected to a killing frost by the postal regulations. The grateful recipient isn't supposed, in ordinary society, to look a gift horse in the mouth, but what can be said when each item is tagged, coffee 40 cents, 3 bars soap 25 cents, 1 pound candy 50 cents, 1 pair second-hand shoes for child $2.50, all the way down the sickening list of well-intentioned gifts that make the giver feel contemptibly small?

It doesn't help much when one has to make the shame-faced apology that this is a Government regulation. Is it really necessary that the Government of the United States should be informed when an old coat or blanket is passed on where it may be more needed? Must one get a bill of lading from—Goodwill for instance—an excellent place, where buyer and seller benefit?

At this season of the year when any child looks forward to some small toy, some recognition of the blessed Christmas season, it seems utterly unreasonable to raise the price of postage almost three times because such a remembrance is included. Yet a new 25-cent edition of "Alice in Wonderland," and a very tiny, old copy of some of Grimm's fairy-tales in the original, since this was going to a wee German fraulein, raised the price of shipping from 60 cents to $1.50. There is a special tax on toys and books! I hate to believe it of Uncle Sam, but the postal clerk read the incredibly mean requirements. Someone has put something over on Uncle.

"Modern Arms And Free Men"

It is a fine thing that Dr. Vannevar Bush has stimulated so much discussion with the publication of his recent book, Modern Arms and Free Men. But it may be desirable for someone to reply to the Monday morning quarterbacks who have been blaming Dr. Bush for plays that never occurred and statements he never made.

In his letter published in your issue of December 5, Mr. Peter Cone states confidently that Dr. Bush's "basic premise, which colors all his most important conclusions, is that the Soviets would not possess an atomic bomb for a decade." No such premise can be found in the pages of Modern Arms and Free Men, nor can it be reasonably implied from anything on the printed page. It apears to be based more on a long-distance psychoanalysis of Dr. Bush than on careful reading or diligent research into the record.

In fact, the record shows that shortly after the war Dr. Bush predicted the Russians would be producing fissionable material within four to five years, if they made an all-out effort and imported needed materials from outside Russia, as they have evidently done. He made this prediction before Senator McMahon's Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on December 3, 1945, and it apears at page 175 of the printed transcript of the hearings. Bush says in his book that "I am not much of a prophet," but he came a good deal closer in this case than some recent Gallup Polls on easier questions.

Cone also adds his wish that Dr. Bush had withheld publication of his book "until he had reexamined his conclusions" in the light of the President's recent announcement than an atomic explosion had occurred in Russia. In fact, the book had not yet been published when the Russian explosion became known; and if any substantial changes had been required, there would have been time to make them. But in view of Dr. Bush's 1945 estimate, it would appear that the book was written in 1949 by a man who regarded an atomic explosion in Russia as a distinct possibility for the near future, and that no substantial changes were required when the event actually occurred.

The foreword of the book itself is dated September 26; it refers to the President's announcement made three days earlier and states:

"The impact of science and the evolution of weapons indeed produce a fast-moving background for all thought on our destiny . . . Yet the purpose of this book and the thesis it presents are not dependent upon the quickly changing events of day to day. The principles that underlie our democratic system will remain the same, the position of science within our framework is unaltered, and the resourcefulness and steadiness which have carried us through the tough days of the past decade will carry us through the future as well, if we preserve and enhance them, whatever the technical aspects of the problems before us may be. The scene changes, but the aspirations of men of good will persist. That there is hope these aspirations may become realities, if we keep our strength, is the thesis of this book."

Dr. Bush apparently did not think that conclusions such as these had been outmoded by the event that occurred in Russia, and if one more prediction can be ventured it is that most people who read his book will agree with him.

Austrian Treaty Stall

By Andre Visson

Russian Tactics

ONCE AGAIN the Soviets have stalled the Austrian peace treaty negotiations which appeared to be making some progress in the last weeks. Once again diplomats in Washington, London and Paris—to say nothing of the unfortunate Austrian leaders in Vienna, who with admirable patience and skill have been waging a hard fight for the independence of their occupied and partitioned country—are asking themselves: What are the Soviets up to?

Is Moscow merely pursuing a hard bargain, trying to squeeze a few million dollars more out of Austria? Or is there something more sinister behind the Soviet tactics?

Western diplomats who have been negotiating the thorny Austrian peace treaty with the Soviets have been keeping their fingers crossed for three years. They were never convinced that Soviet Russia was sincere in declaring that she was as anxious as the Western nations to conclude a peace treaty with Austria. But the Western diplomats had no alternatives. They had to accept the Soviet declarations at face value. So long as the Soviet diplomats were willing to discuss peace with Austria, the Western diplomats were anxious to do their very best to make such a treaty come to life.

IN THE desperate darkness in which the West has been facing the Soviets during the last three years, the Austrian peace treaty was perhaps the only ray of light. The Soviets did not create a puppet Communist government in their zone of Austria, as they did in Germany. Together with the Western nations, they recognized the freely elected Austrian government in Vienna. And last June in Paris, when the Big Four Foreign Ministers met for the first time after the deadlock over Berlin, the Soviets had even reached an agreement with the Western powers on Austria's frontiers.

It was agreed in Paris that Austria should have her frontiers restored as of the date of the Anschluss. The financial and economic problems also appeared on the way to solution. The Soviets, who had been stubbornly claiming all German-owned assets in Austria as Allied war-booty in which they wanted to have the lion's—or rather the bear's—share, agreed to a settlement. They were to receive a lump sum of 150 million dollars plus 60 percent of Austria's oil-producing and oil-exploration areas.

On the basis of the 1947 production the Austrian oil facilities were evaluated at 420,000 tons a year. In addition to money and oil, the Soviets were to receive all the assets of the Danube Shipping Co. in eastern Austria. All this represented a considerable financial burden on Austria. But no price seemed to the Austrians too high for their independence and for seeing the foreign troops—especially the Soviets—leave their country.

As for the Western powers, they were ready to make almost any concession in order to see the Soviet signature at the bottom of an Austrian peace treaty. For the Western powers an Austrian peace treaty means more than just Austrian independence. It means that 90 days after its signing the Soviet forces must be withdrawn from Hungary and Romania.

THE WESTERN powers have indeed made it clear that they consider an Austrian peace treaty as a touchstone for further relations with Moscow. Last September, when the Soviets indicated their willingness to have the Big Four Foreign Ministers discuss German questions, American and British spokesmen at Lake Success declared that their delegations would oppose any discussion of German questions until their deputies agree on an Austrian peace treaty.

The deputies of the Big Four, who moved from London to New York, reopened their negotiations on the Austrian peace treaty at the Waldorf Astoria on September 23. For weeks it looked as if the Soviet delegates were this time ready to reach final agreement. Nine points, almost entirely concerning former enemy assets, were discussed on a strictly technical level.

When the Soviet deputy, Georgi N. Zarubin, came out last week with the sudden statement that no agreement could be reached "for the time being," he again gave a strictly technical reason for the new stalemate. He pretended that the Soviets had to wait for the termination of the talks between Soviet and Austrian authorities in Vienna as to the amount the Austrians would have to pay the Soviets for various supplies and services since 1945.

Western diplomats would like to believe that the main Soviet motive is the squeezing of more money out of the Austrians. But they cannot help wondering whether there is not some connection between this new Soviet maneuver in New York and the latest Cominform "war declaration" on Tito.

If, on Moscow's instructions, the Cominform is really preparing a large-scale offensive against Tito in the coming Moscow has no interest in an Austrian peace treaty which months, then it is obvious that would oblige her to withdraw her forces from Hungary and Romania within 90 days. There is still a dim hope in Washington that the Soviets will change their attitude on Austria. But if they continue to balk and stall, then we may expect some unpleasant developments in Danubian Europe before next summer.

Matter of Fact

AEC Pestered by Neck-Breathers

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

THE resignation of David E. Lilienthal from the chairmanship of the Atomic Energy Commission has left this vital sphere of effort in an appalling mess. The mess is none of Lilienthal's making, but his going has brought the situation into rather lurid relief. Hence there is now talk, in the very restricted circles where the situation is understood at all, of the possible need for a wholly new start next year.

The reason for Lilienthal's resignation was entirely personal. He simply did not like his job. He is one of the great administrators and public servants of our time, but he has no inclination to be a manufacturer of weapons of hideous destruction. When this turned out to be his real task as AEC chairman, he had no enthusiasm for it. The sense of duty that kept him going was broken down by the most recent spasm of neurotic Senatorial inquisition, and he resigned forthwith.

Furthermore, Lilienthal's efforts have at least kept the mess in the atomic energy effort within reasonable limits. On the working level, the Atomic Energy Commission is adequately if not always brilliantly staffed and its various divisions are operating pretty satisfactorily. The program can jog along for a while without risk of immediate breakdown.

There is clear risk of eventual breakdown, however, in the state of affairs at top. It was already unwieldy, to try to run a great industrial effort through a commission. If not replaced by a single qualified administrator, the AEC ought probably to be reduced from five men to three. What is even worse, however, is the enormous number of persons legally authorized to breathe down the commission's neck.

Congressional Interference

THIS role is performed by the General Advisory Committee, by the Military Liaison Committee and, above all, by the Joint Congressional Committee. These neck-breathers represent an obvious sacrifice of efficiency to "safeguards." And their mere existence has also reacted sharply on the relationships within the AEC.

It has long been known, of course, that Commissioner Lewis Strauss was at odds with Chairman Lilienthal. This disagreement has been rendered crippling by Strauss' habit of running for aid to Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper, or other members of the Joint Congressional Committee, or leaders of the Defense Department.

Now, moreover, politics has crept in. While no doubt an able man, the most recently chosen commissioner, Gordon Dean, is also the patronage appointee of the chairman of the Congressional Joint Committee, Senator Brien McMahon. In the nature of things, Dean's special relationship increases the invitation to congressional interference in the commission's proper work, already extended, as it were, by Strauss.

As if these obstacles were not enough to repel any candidate for the succession to Lilienthal, the President has lately weakened the commission's support from the executive branch. The issue here has been the form of our cooperation in atomic development with the British and Canadians.

Cling to 'Secrecy'

THE explosion of the Soviet atomic bomb has removed every intelligible obstacle to the fullest Anglo-Canadian-American cooperation. One of the strongest lessons of Dr. Vannevar Bush's "Modern Arms and Free Men," is that we are likely to benefit the most by full cooperation. Chairman Lilienthal fought for full cooperation from the first. But the White House and the State Department have alike shrunk back from asking Congress for the necessary exceptions to the "secrecy" rules.

As a result, the recent conversations with the British here would have been comic, if they had not been tragic. Sir Oliver Franks and Sir Alexander Cockcroft, representing the British government, went into the talks completely briefed, completely united and completely aware of what had to be accomplished. Although Secretary of State Acheson had been strongly urged to take personal charge on the American side, our representatives were six representatives of the AEC, State and Defense Departments, all divided among themselves, all uncertain of policy, all unauthorized to act. Complete failure was only narrowly avoided.

These are the real reasons why the President is having such difficulty in finding a successor for Chairman Lilienthal. In the end, indeed, it seems clear that the President will have to choose between two alternatives. Either he will have to name another of the dim hacks who are becoming so common in vital Government jobs or he will have to promise some qualified man his own energetic support, in any reforms the new chairman may think necessary after a year's experience.

Our Political Economy

'Vigorous' Policy Isn't Enough

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

AS a Nation, we may well accept the maxim of Theodore Roosevelt, the supreme American activist: "I come to preach the doctrine of the strenuous life." "Strenuous" is the proper adjective for our foreign policy.

We have emerged from deep isolation to world leadership. The change has been as positive and dynamic as our approach to all our problems. Yet there has been more muscle than mind in it: we are playing the role as England once played it, with the unreflexive genius of the born muddler.

American foreign policy is directed to objectives rather than to an objective. We distrust the doctrinaire approach because it is uncongenial to the American mind. Nevertheless, historical simplification can be an invaluable tool of policy.

To act without reflecting is bad. But it is almost as bad to think in compartments, with no attempt to fit the puzzle together. History has thrust greatness upon us, and the true test of our leadership will be, not its vigor—no one questions our abounding energy—but whether we know what we are doing.

Conditions Reversed

ENGLAND was the world's banker in a century of peace. There was only one major conflict between the Congress of Vienna and 1914, and that was the American Civil War.

England was the supreme maritime power, the only manufacturing nation in the world, and the banker for all nations, and there were no contenders for her place. Though we are today the world's banker and its leading industrial nation, we draw the world's gold as a magnet draws iron. All international trade is in a sense a struggle against the lodestone of our economic power.

Conditions conspired to make England great. Her investments were secure because the world was secure, and they returned great profits. If in the twentieth century we succeed in making the world prosperous and secure, it will be in spite of the conditions which today confront us, and not because of them.

The first point to bear in mind is this: Our economic problems, both foreign and domestic, are indissolubly linked. This is not because, as the Communists charge, prosperity at home depends on selling abroad or even giving goods away. It is because prosperity and demand abroad depend so largely on high employment and production at home.

When we understand how the two pictures fit together we can act intelligently to make the world of the twenty-first century as secure for our grandchildren as the world of the nineteenth was for our grandfathers, and at a far more decent level of existence.

Rathole Argument

OUR foreign aid program is an almost intuitive reaction to the poverty around us. We do not wish to be the rich man in a poorhouse. We know that communism breeds in misery.

Yet when England invested abroad, she did so in the firm expectation of immediate and tangible profit. Today we do not know for sure whether a foreign investment will ever return a profit. In fact, on a short-term economic analysis, there is reason to conclude that a dollar invested at home will return far more than a dollar invested abroad.

If we stopped here we should agree with the chauvinists that the European Recovery Program is money down a rathole—that on sound economic grounds, our motto should be America First.

But what of the long run? What of the increasing disparity between America's productivity and that of other nations which keep world trade unbalanced?

We have looked on ERP as a short-run expedient for making up the difference between what others sell to us and what we sell to them. But giving dollars away, with no thought for a future corrective, is little more than an international WPA project.

There are two ways to close this "dollar gap." One is just a transfer payment—lowering our own current consumption to let others raise theirs. This is expensive, and it can be interminable.

The other way is to insure that our foreign aid results in increased investment. By raising the level of income abroad, this could eventually make our aid unnecessary. Such a program is harder than it sounds.

When British investors built a railroad or water system abroad, the investment was intended to make money, and it usually did. There was therefore no shortage of private investment capital.

The kind of investment we have to make is so different as to pose entirely new problems. Many areas call for such development as roads and health programs. Even in Europe, political stability hangs like a question mark over loans which normally would be profitable.

That is why neither private capital nor such agencies as the World Bank is a complete answer. Our program must be a matter of deliberate public policy, and it will have to disregard entirely the old concept of what constitutes a profit.

By coming to power in the twentieth century, we have been handed a lemon. As Drew Pearson is fond of saying, "It is up to us to make lemonade out of it."

Long-Term Gain

THE OBSTACLES we face are so disheartening that we are likely to overlook what may be a real long-term advantage to the United States.

Britain's easy investments made easy profits, but they have proved to be to her long-run disadvantage. Because of her position as a manufacturer and processor of foreign raw materials, her investments in development abroad financed competitors who have contributed to her decline.

Our position is the reverse. Because we are so rich in natural resources and in agricultural production, our investments in foreign development, even though they never returned a penny of direct profit, would be to our long-term advantage.

We have little to trade with most agricultural areas. Today we export by giving goods away. Unless we can raise these nations above subsistence levels of output, they may become a permanent drain on us. Our trade can only return to mutual profitability as others approach our rate of development.

Our foreign economic policy should have two objectives: productivity for others, regardless of short-term profit for us; and the strength and stability of the United States as a force for peace in the world. These can be achieved if we think in terms, not of 10 years, but of a century.

But whatever was the case during the ascendency of the British Empire, he prize today is not to the muddler. A foreign policy which is merely strenuous has as much chance of reaching its objective as a car with its hand throttle open and no driver at the wheel.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

'I'll Be Seeing You'

DEAR FRIENDS and Gentle Hearts:

A friend of mine in Hollywood has made an appointment in Eternity. Her name is Frances Marion, for the last quarter of a century a queen among scenario writers.

When these curious events really began, Frances had to go to work because her father had lost his fortune in the San Francisco disaster. Just 16, she went to work on a newspaper, when girl reporters were as rare as girl directors are today.

Late one afternoon, the managing editor sent for her and announced:

"Frances, I am going to give you a big chance. Marie Dressler is opening in town tonight in her new play. You know what a boisterous, madcap, fascinating young comedienne she is. Before the show starts, I want you to go backstage and get an interview with her. If you get a good one, I'll print your by-line and raise your salary."

Out into the snowy evening marched Frances and invaded the stage door. Near the star's dressing room she found reporters from other papers waiting for young Marie, and presently she appeared. She carefully asked the name of each reporter and paper; when Frances identified herself, Marie Dressler flushed with sudden anger.

"Did they have the nerve to try this again?" she demanded. "And with just a kid like you! Well, I can't talk to you. I'll have to ask you to leave at once. And you can tell your editor that now you know what of a cheapskate he is. For your information, I'm going to sue your publisher. We've been at odds a long time now. I told him I would never give another line to his paper. He made a bet that he would print an interview just the same—and he is using a raw kid like you to collect his bet. Now please go back and tell him it didn't work."

THEN Miss Dressler invited the other reporters into her dressing room. Frances Marion remained where she stood; she felt in a daze. She dared not return to the office without her story; and she couldn't bring herself to go home and tell her father, ill in bed, that she had been fired. So she just stood there.

After a while, she saw the other reporters come out. She heard musicians tuning their instruments. She saw the costumed actors stand ready for the curtain's rise. She was still standing rooted to the boards as Dressler burst from her dressing room and swept into her first entrance. Again and again, in different costumes, Dressler hurried back and forth, with no eyes for the stricken girl.

At last the show was over. The scenery was struck, the properties put away. Last of the players to leave was Marie Dressler, and she saw Frances Marion on the deserted stage.

"So you're smarter than I thought. You want to break my heart. It's a dirty trick, you know, but all right. Have supper with me in my room in the hotel. I'll give you a story. But tell your editor I am still going to sue."

When the two parted that night, Marie Dressler, who was twice the size of Frances, insisted on enveloping her in her own fur coat. At the last handshake, she kissed her and said, "So long, Frances, I'll be seeing you."

THIRTY years were to pass before that promise was fulfilled. Dressler rose to even greater heights of popularity and then sank like a falling star. There was a time when she actually sold frankfurters on the Coney Island boardwalk. Hope was almost gone when she got a chance in the movies, appearing with a new comedian named Charlie Chaplin. The picture helped make Chaplin famous but the critics reported that Marie Dressler was a flop.

She was living a frugal life in a Laurel Canyon flat, when one day she came face to face again with Frances Marion. But now, Frances was one of the most valuable writers in the studios. Frances went home with Marie and they had a pot of Irish tea and some cookies, and the younger woman heard the story of the fallen star's hard luck.

As she kissed the aging actress goodbye, Frances said, "So long, Marie, I'll be seeing you!"

An hour later, she was talking on the telephone with Irving Thalberg, young boss of MGM studios.

"Irving," she babbled, "I've found just the one woman to play that character part in our new picture—Marie Dressler! And I can get her!"

"You're having a nightmare, baby," Thalberg laughed; "Dressler is finished. I don't want her. Even if she were good, she's nothing like the character you are writing."

"Wait until you see the way I've revised it," Frances told him, and hung up.

The rest of the afternoon, and all through the night, Frances sat at her typewriter and rewrote the scenario. When he read the new version, Thalberg began to chuckle.

"Frances," he said, "it's a female trick you played on me, but maybe you are right. Get Dressler down here."

YOU must be very young indeed if you do not remember the late blooming of Marie Dressler; no longer just a star, she was a comet. What's more, she became the most beloved woman on the screen and a mother to many a young girl in Hollywood. The long, bleak years had crowded her heart with mercy, and now she reached out to others in distress.

"Don't listen to that guy and the line he's pulling on you," she would tell some little hopeful. "He says you'll make him proud of you? You make your mother proud of you."

Only a few months before she died, I was her neighbor in a desert bungalow, and I shall never forget the sweet matter-of-factness of her wisdom and her incorrigible interest in people. It wasn't long after that when a doctor bluntly told her the truth: only a few more months of life.

In those last few months, Frances Marion used to go see Marie every day—sit at her bedside, and they would have long talks. One day the nurse telephoned that Frances need not come; Marie was in a deep coma and the end was near. But Frances hurried over and sat beside her through long, silent hours.

The afternoon was almost gone when the watchful friend saw a flutter of the heavy eyelids; then the old hand reached out groping, and Frances seized it. Bending low, she heard Marie Dressler murmur, "It's Frances!"

"Yes, Marie."

There was a long silence again, and then the last words:

"So long, Frances, I'll be seeing you." And Frances Marion knows that she has a rendezvous which will surely be kept—an appointment in the Beyond.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

'Big Business' Blanks Filled In

By Drew Pearson

ONE reason the public knows so little about the giant trusts that control American industry is the aura of secrecy in which they are permitted to operate—sometimes with the help of the Government.

The other day, for instance, Commerce Secretary Charles Sawyer issued a report on monopolistic trends in business in which he presented elaborate tables showing the growth of monopoly. But he left out a most important detail—the names of corporations responsible for the alarming growth. When this columnist asked why, he was told by Commerce officials that Sawyer himself didn't have access to such information, though the Census Bureau had provided statistics as to their size.

Sawyer aides further stated that the Census Bureau might "violate the law" if it provided Sawyer or anyone else with the names of individual companies, since this was a "confidential" matter. Inference was that the big trusts, fearing some advantage to competitors, would refuse to open their books to the Government unless their corporate identities were protected.

However, the Merry-Go-Round is happy to fill in the blank spaces in the Sawyer report, obtained from other official sources. Here are the four big concerns which he said controlled 55.7 percent of the Nation's automobile output: General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and Hudson.

And here are the names of the eight companies which the Commerce Secretary said controlled 89.6 percent of the tire and inner tube business: Goodyear, Firestone, United States Rubber, B. F. Goodrich, General Tire and Rubber, Dayton Rubber, Seiberling and the Lee Rubber & Tire Corp.

Probably the greatest monopoly of all, however, is cigarettes, 90.4 percent of which are cornered by four firms, according to Sawyer. He did not name them. They are: American Tobacco (Lucky Strikes), R. J. Reynolds (Camels), Liggett-Myers (Chesterfields) and Lorillard (Old Golds).

The eight companies Sawyer said controlled a whopping 86.4 percent of the distilled liquor business (but didn't name) are: Schenley, Seagrams, National Distillers, Hiram Walker, Brown-Forman, Glenmore, American Distilling and Philip Blum.

More than half (53.6 percent) of the Nation's meat-packing business also is controlled by eight firms, which Sawyer did not name. They are: Armour, Swift, Wilson, Cudahy, Morrell, Rath Packing (Iowa), Hormel (Minn.) and Oscar M. Mayer Co. of Chicago.

Other big outfits not named in the Sawyer report are:

AIRCRAFT—The eight companies controlling 75.1 percent of the industry are: United, Curtiss-Wright, Bendix, Wright Aeronautical, Douglas, Consolidated-Vultee, Glenn Martin and Lockheed.

STEEL—Monopolized by eight copanies, with over 60 percent of the Nation's output: United States Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Jones and Laughlin, National, Armco, Inland and Youngstown Sheet and Tube.

CHEMICALS—The eight companies controlling about 65 percent of the industry are: DuPont, Union Carbide, Dow Chemical, Allied, American Viscose, American Cyanamid, Monsanto and Hercules Powder.

Sex Crime Deterrent

THE mighty arm of Uncle Sam, instead of State and local courts, will crack down on sex criminals if a young Congressman who dealt with them as a battling county prosecutor in Kentucky has his way.

Representative Frank Chelf of Kentucky is drafting legislation to make sex crimes a Federal offense and subject to stiff, inflexible penalties up to the death sentence. Insanity, the usual defense of moral maniacs who prey on children, could not be a plea under Chelf's bill.

"Insane—my eye," says Chelf. "Most of these criminals are crazy like a fox. If they know they face a long prison term or death, they'll stop their depredations on society mighty quick. I've had experience with murderers, rapists and other sex offenders as a county prosecutor, and I know that the fear of punishment is the greatest deterrent to such crimes."

Ten years in prison would be the minimum penalty in the Chelf bill. Psychiatric treatment would be required during confinement.

"What I'm driving at is a law that not only penalizes, but prevents the repetition of sex crimes," Chelf emphasizes. "There must be an end to this practice of sending these depraved characters up for 90 days or five years and then turning them loose again to repeat their crimes."

A Slice of Butter

THE big dairy lobby has borrowed John L. Lewis' favorite money raiser—the checkoff system—to finance its fight against the oleo tax repeal bill.

However, Lewis' coal miners at least had a chance to vote their approval of the checkoff, whereas the dairy lobby is docking milk farmers in Minnesota and some other States $1 each whether they like it or not. The money is taken out of the milk checks which creameries pay to farmers and is turned over to the St. Paul headquarters of the National Creameries Association, which has been sparkplugging the fight against Senate enactment of the House-passed oleo bill.

After deducting the dollar, creameries are instructed to hand the farmers a notice stating the money will be refunded if the farmers go through the red tape of filling out a form saying they don't wish to contribute to the lobby's war chest.

It's a device possibly meriting the attention of the Federal Trade Commission. Naturally, dairy farmers will think twice before demanding their dollars back from creameries on which they depend for future business.

Looking at the South

Wasteful Man Alienates Ducks

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, MISS.—The rest of the country may be worrying about John Lewis, the shipment of atom materials to Russia and whither the welfare state in 1950, but these matters are dwarfed in the lower Mississippi Valley by another and graver problem.

That problem has to do with ducks, or, to be more exact, with the absence of ducks.

They just aren't around this December. If the cost of killing one mallard in ordinary times is computed at 10 bucks, then the cost this winter is at least four times that high in most of the hitherto sure spots.

That figure, of course, includes the price of medicinal whisky, gasoline, food, shells, hunting outfits and the like. It may, therefore, be argued that the computation is exaggerated, since a man has to eat, sleep, drink and wear clothes somewhere anyway, and he might as well attend to these necessities on a duck-hunting trip. Even so, the ratio of ducks to expense is the most depressing in history.

I speak from personal knowledge. On two three-day trips taken by four hunters, a total of six ducks came within range and only three paid the extreme penalty for their folly. There just weren't any more around. Nor were the Canadian geese, usually so obliging at this time of year, any more cooperative. We shot at empty bottles—soft drink bottles—afloat on the river, and mourned the bad season. By and large, that's what most duck-hunters hereabouts have been doing this year.

This duck shortage wouldn't be serious except for one of the reasons for the situation. That reason is worth writing about. There weren't many ducks in the lower valley this winter because (1) the weather has remained unseasonably warm, (2) extended drought conditions have caused them to seek other feeding grounds and (3) the river and lesser water habitats of ducks are abnormally low, reflecting the general water shortage and the continuing lowering of water tables everywhere.

No one can do anything about warm weather or even about droughts. But the lower water tables in the United States are a matter of concern to millions of people besides disappointed duckhunters.

This country is wasting its water supply. The disappearance of forests, the erosion of land, the stepped-up use of water, the irrigation of wastelands, the artificially high requirements of urban society—these factors are contributing to a potentially disastrous long-run situation.

Here in Mississippi, a million acres have been burning because of drought-provoked forest fires. Many lesser rivers and creeks are dry or nearly dry. The great Mississippi along many stretches is half as wide as is usual at this time of year.

The ducks seem to have a better idea of conditions than we have. They may be more concerned than are most of us, for they have duck sense enough to realize its relationship to their own living conditions. I doubt that many duck hunters see the relationship between water tables and the eventual welfare of resource-wasting man.

Few Dixie Tears as King Cotton Moves West

KING COTTON is migrating West, but many of his subjects in Dixie do not mourn his departure.

Since World War I, when the high price of cotton first put a welcoming gleam in Western eyes, the great crop has risen in popularity in the West while simultaneously losing favor in the Old South, notes the National Geographic Society.

This year finds Western cotton production so vastly increased that Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California will account for almost half of the estimated 1949 crop of 15,524,000 bales, latest forecasts reveal.

Dixie farmers, meanwhile, are planting less than half as much cotton as they did two decades ago. Many former cotton farms have shifted entirely to other crops. It took World War II and the global need for foodstuffs to bring about the final break between the South and the traditional one-crop system that long tied the region and its welfare to the rise and fall of cotton prices.

Though cotton has been raised in the South since early Colonial days, it was not until after Eli Whitney's invention of the cotton gin in 1792 that the great cotton plantation emerged to dominate Southern life. Dixie became the cotton capital of the world, unchallenged until the havoc of Civil War and reconstruction cost her many markets abroad.

This year, in State after State across the cotton country, Southern farmers are telling the same story—smaller cotton fields, more grains, more hogs, more cattle, more poultry. While cotton is still the South's biggest money crop, growers there are finding that other crops can be money-makers.

The Louisiana sweet potato, for example, has climbed since 1933 to third place among the State's money-making crops. Arkansas, although still one of the three top cotton-producing States in the Nation, is concentrating her cotton in the rich bottomlands of the Mississippi River, and giving over other lands to fruits, vegetables, hay, oats and dairy herds. And Mississippi's beef cattle on her Western-named ranches bring memories of sagebrush and cowboys.

The Magazine Rack

By Charles E. Davis, Jr.

WHAT if I don't get married?

Now there's a question for you and, in this case, it's a woman asking the question—and answering it.

Virginia Hurray, feature writer for the Youngstown, Ohio, Vindicator, says in Look that "they tell me I may never marry" because there just aren't enough men to go around.

Virginia concedes that "like most other members of my sex, I hope to marry," but adds bravely that "I can face the prospect of middle-aged and old-maidenhood with something like indifference."

(My, my, Virginia, and you only 27.)

She declares she'll get along all right even if that wedding band does elude her, and so will most of the eight million other American women who must remain single.

"Stop worrying about us!" says Virginia fiercely.

It's no good, Virginia; we just can't help worrying about your problem.

Virginia says articles on the man shortage are invariably written by men. That's easily explained. Quite a few men are married. And what's that old saw about misery loving company?

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus and there's a man waiting somewhere for you and all the other single women. But get in the race. Keep your figure trim. Be fussy with you hair, your makeup and your wardrobe. And don't be too cold a potato.

Send us a wedding announcement, willya, Virginia?

LOOK also presents Grantland Rice's 1949 All-America football team, selected with the aid of 485 football writers, among them The Washington Post's Shirley Povich.

Bob Williams, Emil Sitko and Leon Hart of Notre Dame are listed on the first team. The Irish are the only team to place more than one player on the first eleven.

One last look at Look: Lewis F. Gillenson contributes an interesting word portrait of CBS Boss William S. Paley, who gave other network executives a new set of ulcers when he raided their ranks and signed such stars as Amos 'n' Andy, Edgar Bergen, Jack Benny, Bing Crosby and Red Skelton.

NOT all those on relief rolls are needy, a recent investigation in Detroit disclosed. Saturday Evening Post reports that 30 percent of Detroit reliefers were found to be chiselers.

The man who heads the vast network of Gimbels and Saks department stores, isn't all business. Although he has built his merchandising empire to a point where it does nearly a billion dollars' worth of business a year, Gimbel loves the pleasures of life—such as good food and drink.

He has the stamina of a college crewman. He sleeps only four or five hours a night, plays golf with the drive of a youngster, takes long jogs and fishes.

"He still thinks he's 18 years old and heavyweight champion," explains one crony, Stanton Griffis, our Ambassador to Argentina.

There have been tales that Gimbel bets high stakes on golf and gin rummy. Gimbel says this is not so; that his betting limit at golf is $10 Nassau and 5 cents a point at gin rummy, so that "nobody wins or loses more than three or four hundred dollars."

Sterling North's Gossip Column

'Invisible Censorship' Building Head of Steam

THE BIG, undercover story which has authors, editors and book publishers seething these days is the invisible censorship being clamped on the written word by belligerent minority groups which hold themselves to be above criticism.

The first amendment to the Constitution guarantees American citizens freedom of speech and of the press. Very rarely has the Government itself curtailed that freedom.

But several racial and religious minority groups, usurping a power wisely foresworn by the Federal Government, do not hesitate to threaten, and in some instances blackmail, authors and publishers into silence.

It would be hard to find any group of men in the United States who have fought as hard or as long for the rights of minorities as the members of the writing profession. There is scarcely one among us who has not fought for the civil liberties of endangered minorities, raised money to help their causes, battled bigotry endangering their safety.

And we shall continue to do so.

However, when elements within these same minorities start demanding that recognized classics and serious magazines be taken from library shelves, that books examining their economic, religious and political beliefs be kept from publication, the time has come for some one to analyze a shocking situation.

If a belief is tenable then it is defendable in open debate. And the American, democratic way to resolve issues is in open print and in the open forum.

If a belief is untenable, neither dogmatic assertion nor a conspiracy of silence will make it acceptable to men of logic. And all that an invisible censorship can possibly do is to create a head of steam which, instead of escaping through the safety valve of open expression, becomes dangerously confined and explosive.

American democracy itself is at stake on this careful hushed-up issue. Week by week and year by year the area of open discussion is further circumscribed, until writers, entertainers, columnists, book and magazine publishers, lecturers and radio broadcasters are at their wits' end in an attempt to find completely innocuous subjects and attitudes which will not enrage some thin-skinned pressure group.

The time has come for a few of us to speak out.

Eliminators of Time and Space

3 Gadgets That Crossed Up Marx

By Sterling North

NOT SO LONG AGO. By Lloyd Morris. Random. 504 pp. $5.

THE principal fallacy which makes most of the prognostication of Karl Marx such arrant nonsense is his naive belief that revolution follows a logical "dialectical" process.

His crude triangulation of the future (thesis vs. antithesis, resulting in synthesis) leaves out of account innumerable sports and variables which make society to some extent the victim of mere happenstance.

LLOYD MORRIS

For instance, three inventions which began as dreams and playthings—movies, automobiles and radio—have been at least as important in shaping the modern world as the grim struggle between capital and labor. Viewed together, these three eliminators of time and space constitute a triple revolution which in a surging half century has radically altered our sex customs, entertainment habits, modes of living, standards of comfort, techniques of politics, methods of travel and means of communication.

It is almost impossible to overestimate the power for good and evil which escaped from Pandora's box when Thomas Edison began fooling around with a series of rapidly recorded photographic impressions which could later be projected upon a screen; when Daimler, Benz, the Duryea brothers and Henry Ford began tinkering with the horseless carriage, and when Prof. Reginald Aubrey Fessenden, building upon earlier work by Hertz and Marconi, mystified and enthralled unbelieving wireless operators on Christmas Eve, 1906, by actually broadcasting violin music and the human voice.

The first automobiles became the rich man's plaything, Nickelodeons the poor man's opiate, and radio the ham's heaven and soon the sponsor's gold mine.

Beyond Imagination

NO social prophet could have imagined that within the lifetime of most of these inventors, nine million men would be dependent for their living upon the "crackpot" gas buggy; that America would be lifted out of the mud to speed at leisure over hundreds of thousands of miles of smooth concrete; that Hollywood would become the international capital of fantasy, helping to alter the cultural and moral standards of hundreds of millions of impressionable citizens while providing the smoothest and most effortless form of entertainment known to man; and that, finally, radio would become such a powerful medium of mass propaganda that no President, dictator or industrial tycoon could possibly ignore it as a method for cramming his brand of goods down the gullets of the unthinking multitude.

Lloyd Morris, in tracing the turbulent history of each of these powerful social forces, holds his philosophizing to a minimum. His book can be read with pleasure by those who are merely interested in such tidbits as the fact that when Mary Pickford played her first movie role she received $5 a day, or that when Clark Gable disrobed in a picture, revealing no undershirt, the sale of men's lingerie immediately dropped 50 percent in the American market.

If you are interested in the rival claims of the Duryea brothers and other patent holders on the early cars, or the fabulous rise of that genius of the flickers, David W. Griffith (whose "Birth of a Nation" unfortunately revived the Ku Klux Klan), or if you want the sordid details on Rudolph Valentino's funeral—all are here recorded.

But it is obviously impossible for such a serious student as Lloyd Morris to completely avoid the serious implications of his thesis. It is important that he offer certain conclusions about the use and misuse we have made of the emancipated genii which have so recently popped from their respective bottles.

Debatable Emancipation

THE author admits that we can never go back to the halcyon simplicity of our naive and bucolic past—and that, in any event, it wasn't so halcyon. Mankind worked longer hours, had less economic security, was more chained in the time-spaced grid in those bad "good old days."

Now the greatest music flows into his home, the best of motors speeds him to distant destinations. He can live in the country with all the additional advantages of the city. The end product of vast technological genius and priceless artistic talent is at his thoughtless finger tips.

But, alas, that is not the whole story. Because all three of the new inventions have been ruthlessly commercialized, modern man has become the most thoroughgoing materialist known to history. The phony standards of Hollywood and of the radio make him endlessly avaricious for objects, gadgets, clothes and homes bigger and better than he can afford. The cheaply romantic story of chase and conquest (in sex as in moneymaking), poured out all day over the radio and all evening at the movies, undermines the contentment formerly found in simple pleasures: reading, gardening, craftsmanship, quiet family life, homemade music and the contemplative life of the spirit.

Our ever-increasing irritability sends us speeding over the highways like ants in a disturbed ant hill. We are losing the art of independent thinking, the art of conversation. All of our thrills are becoming vicarious.

Cars, movies and the radio! Three mechanical demigods, or three mechanical devils, depending upon how we use them. Lloyd Morris leaves us with an important thought from Santayana on this problem: "Human reason lives by turning the friction of material forces into the light of ideal goods."

Hinduism Is Painted Blacker Than Missionaries Regard It

TWILIGHT IN INDIA. By Gervee Baronte. Philosophical. $3.75.

A CAPTAIN of an English cruiser once said that the best part of his visits to India was when his ship had sailed about 10 miles out to sea. The smells and filth and sordidness were all left behind. India then became a beautiful gem on the horizon. Anyone who reads Twilight in India will understand this remark.

From the point of view of modern, liberal-Western thought, Gervee Baronte writes a critical description of the Indian's common life. Hinduism, she claims, will continue to prevent progress in India until it is destroyed and the castes are turned into trade unions.

The first chapters describe some of the worst practices and principles of Hinduism. The worship of Siva and his lingam exalts the place of sex in life. Child marriages, blood sacrifice (sometimes human sacrifice), torture to appease angry demons, are all common.

Most of the book is an interesting, systematic study of individual castes, their identifying characteristics, their marriage and death ceremonies. There are chapters on astrology, legends of the gods, magic and ceremonies. The author concludes that Hinduism holds sway over India by exploiting men's baser desires—their selfishness, their desire to win salvation at the expense of others and their inordinate sexual appetites.

"Twilight in India" is not a great book. It moves too much on one plane. You see the flat, drab, self-centered daily life of the Indians. You see the Brahmans exploiting the other castes and all of them living in filth.

There is no appreciation of the heights and depths of life. Indian mysticism, art, Ghandi's teaching are hardly touched. There is none of the romanticism about India you find in Kipling. Hinduism is all black; all evil. Even Christian missionaries seldom claim that Hinduism is all as dark as this liberal writer seems to say.

But for interesting reading, a wealth of material and out-of-the-way information, for a look at the surface of Indian life and for a complete disillusionment with the idea that all religions amount to the same thing, read this book.—THE REV. CRAIG E. EDER.

A Philosophical Explanation

High Court's Discords And Concords Examined

By E. Barrett Prettyman
Associate Justice, United States Court of Appeals

ON UNDERSTANDING THE SUPREME COURT. By Paul A. Freund. Little, Brown.

TO ALL interested in the probabilities of the ultimate success of constitutional forms of government, and to all curious concerning the part of the judicial branch of such governments in those probabilities, this is an absorbing and valuable book. The author has been law clerk to Mr. Justice Brandeis, and so saw the court from within; an Assistant Solicitor General, and so experienced it from counsel's lectern; and a professor of law at Harvard, and so observed it acutely from a distance.

PRETTYMAN

The book consists of three lectures delivered in April under the auspices of the Rosenthal Foundation at Northwestern University. It does not purport to be an exhaustive study of all facets of its subject but treats of three: First, the concord and the discord discernible in some phases of the court's work; second, a portrait of a liberal judge; third, the part played by others than the justices in the judicial processes.

Mr. Freund finds in the field of civil liberties both concord and unsymmetrical discord in the court's opinions. He perceives a dual standard of judgment for the constitutionality of actions affecting human rights and property rights, with a momentum of respect for the former not to be accorded the latter. But he sees in this an equalization of long-standing attitudes of the reverse order, and also an attunement with contemporary history.

Lines of Discord

AMONG the lines of discord, he finds three. Concerning the relative regard given what he calls the active proselyting interests as compared with the quiet virtues, such as the right of privacy, he finds the judges in disagreement; and likewise upon the clear and present danger doctrine for the measurement of valid intrusion upon freedom of speech; and likewise upon the relevance of federalism in the vindication of civil liberties—i. e., the differing results reached in Federal and State cases. Mr. Freund thinks that the process of constitutional decision has become more avowedly an expression of political philosophy than ever before.

A review is not an appropriate medium for expression of either agreement or disagreement with an author's views, and this reviewer attempts neither. But one must confess to an impression of inadequacy in respect to this first part of the book—not inadequacy of material or expression but rather of lack of depth and breadth of judgment in evaluating so complex a process as the rendition of judicial decisions by a court of nine judges.

Decisions are the composite of many factors, and while philosophical concepts of the judges may be one factor, complete evaluation of a court's work is not so simple as to be accomplished merely by assigning decisions to philosophies. Judges may find themselves repeatedly in disagreement with the courses of action pursued, or the actions taken, in causes with which they strongly agree.

Moreover, philosophy itself is not always a perceived reservoir from which a judge may consciously draw needed answers. Quite as often, perhaps, a philosophy is a mosaic produced by many decisions upon many factual variations. It may eventually be a reflection of the composite, but it may not produce the pieces. Mr. Freund, of course, is not guilty of so extreme simplicity, but he does leave his reader with a vague sense of dissatisfaction in his first lecture.

Brandeis Portrait

IN THE second lecture, which is a portrait of a liberal judge in the person of Mr. Justice Brandeis, the author reaches heights of brilliance and renders soul satisfaction. The liberalism of the great justice, he says, lay in an essential morality of mind, and he suggests four manifestations of that quality: (1) an insistence on knowledge and, from knowledge, understanding, particularly of facts; (2) a rejection of opportunism, meaning a refusal to subordinate his standards of judicial review to his preferences or convictions upon the legislative or administrative propriety of the matter involved in the litigation; (3) an insistence upon jurisdictional and procedural observances; and (4) his rejection of sentimentality.

The more familiar elements of the justice's liberalism, his attitude toward stare decisis and his expression of social and economic ideas, are left to less extensive discussion. This lecture is a gem for contemplative consideration.

The emphasis in the third lecture is laid upon the part played by the tactics of counsel in the decisions eventually reached by the court. From the discussion, one acquires a disturbing realization of the disproportionate power possessed by Government counsel in this respect, by reason of the vast assortment of cases at their disposal as pawns in such tactics.

By every standard, this is a book to be read and then digested by thoughtful people generally, whether agreement or disagreement be the result.

A river of great destiny
a cross-section of the nation

THE Potomac
By FREDERICK GUTHEIM Illustrated by Mitchell Jamieson
There's a fabulous history about the river that cradled this republic — traditionally, it nourished the elegance and scandal of the Tidewater plantations . . .
industrially, it marked the growth of vital ironworks, fine glass, and a highway for commerce in the West . . .
nationally, it's the nerve center of a vigorous nation.
The Potomac is a plastic river, ever being shaped anew by restless nature and a dynamic society.
Hervey Allen says THE POTOMAC is "a fine book, a brilliant performance, a real piece of creative history."

A Profound 'Psychoanalysis'

Art Book of Decade by Malraux

By Thomas Craven

THE art book of the year and, in fact, the most distinguished contribution to the literature of art written in a decade or more, comes from France, the work of Andre Malraux, already known to Americans by his remarkable novels of the late war.

This great achievement, though precisely titled a psychology, is neither a scientific text nor the application of specious theories to historical deposits. It is, in brief, a profound analysis of the manifold ways in which the creative impulse, in Occident and Orient alike, finds its way through the human personality to external expression, and an appraisal of the nature and value of the formal embodiment in painting and sculpture.

Malraux develops the concept of art from its magnificent periods of florescence, when painting and sculpture were organic ingredients of religious cultures and part of a living context, to our modern age, wherein art has become a segregated profession. He shows how the museum has changed our ideas of works of art by isolating them, thus transforming the effigy of a god into a mere statue and a painted symbol into a detached picture. And with trenchant insight he discusses the effect of the printed reproduction on our ideas of art, an influence which has hastened the separation of the object from its religious base and made it a tool for intellectuals.

"Madonna and Child," by Agostino di Buccio, from "Masterpieces of Sculpture from the National Gallery of Art," by Charles Semour, jr. (Coward-McCann, $9.75).

Convincing Apology

OCCASIONALLY, this gifted Frenchman, in repudiating the absolutes of determinism, and in limiting the value of subject matter, veers toward enchanting sophistries, but always checks himself in time. He is far too wise a man to subscribe to such popular esthetic fallacies as art for art's sake and the primacy of plastic form. He constructs the most convincing apology for modernist art that has yet appeared, viewing the movement in historical perspective and saving himself from the iniquity of personal criticism by refusing to pass judgment on the distortions of Picasso and the patterns of the various abstractionists.

In order to find a home for latter-day French art in the community of great cultures, he defends a culture without a religion, and an antibourgeois art that consumes its subject, uses nature as a stockpile, not as a model to be imitated, and everyday experience as a summons to the creative act rather than something to be utilized autobiographically.. Art, therefore, resolves itself into a matter of style, of forms which, though remote from life, are connected with universal forces and rhythms. This work, beautifully manufactured in Switzerland for the Bollingen Foundation, has received a physical investiture worthy of its importance.

"In Our Image" is an ambitious attempt to present Old Testament stories in a new setting with realistic, unconventional illustrations. Twenty-six narratives and 32 pictures in full-color comprise the book, which, as concerns the illustrations, is a large-size disappointment. The paintings were conceived in reverence and executed with meticulous solemnity, but they are structurally poor and bloodless. They are the products of integrity and toil, not of original artistry, and the figures for the most part, resemble old character actors made up for their roles. The illustrator, a cover-maker for Time magazine, has been trained in the business of copying photographs and recording the superficial aspects of faces from memory, but such a schooling is not conducive to living works of art.

A Camera Cargo

THE most comprehensive book of the year, pictorially, is the "United States Camera Annual," a huge cargo overflowing in all departments and crying for editorial restraint. There are colored plates made in the Pacific by the Navy in the late war; hundreds of pages of "fine prints"—those presumably possessing an art value and including an international section; studies in science, South Sea islanders, news pictures, and a striking collection of retrospective shots made during the past 100 years.

At least one-third of the volume, regardless of quality, might have been eliminated; some of the snow, for example, and the patterned sand dunes, the pussy cats, the trick exposures and all the arty stuff, particularly the arty nudes. The Swiss and Viennese exhibits are superb, and the book as a whole, despite its overstuffing, is extraordinarily engaging—far more engaging than most compilations of modern paintings.

"The Best of Beardsley" brings together, in a handsome volume bound in the old "Yellow Book" style, 135 examples of the black-and-white art of the most prodigious figure in that outburst of genius led by Whistler and Oscar Wilde. The incredible inventiveness of Beardsley, and his diabolical skill in design, have not grown stale, and in this book we have most of his memorable drawings prefaced by an excellent account of his career, which was terminated by his death at the age of 26.

The old trick of arguing that nonrepresentational art must be valid per se because it contains technical expedients discernible in the designs of the old masters is prettily exemplified in the "Layman's Guide." By the same token, the airplane and the dynamo, being perfectly functional, would surpass anything evolved by the abstractionists. Another case of emphasizing the mechanical apparatus of art to the exclusion of purpose and meaning.

Useful Handbooks

THE DIDACTIC side of art is expounded in three works, two by practitioners. "New Ways of Gravure," a practical guide to the various methods of etching and engraving, is a painstaking job by S. W. Hayter, founder of the famous Atelier 17 in Paris, a craftsman of parts but inclined to dwell on the fantastic tendencies of graphic art. Slobodkin, a practicing sculptor, has written an exhaustive working manual for students of carving and modeling, with methods and processes fully illustrated. An exceptionally useful handbook.

The third work, "Art Then and Now," reviews the attainments in architecture, painting and sculpture from prehistoric times to the present, admittedly offering no new material but put together without pretense or undue bias, and illustrated with unusual judgment and thoroughness.

In "This I Saw," the last of the great popular painters, Francisco Goya, is examined for the first time, in an extended study, by a woman, in a book containing no sentimentality and the shrewdest interpretations of pictures we have read in many a day. Those who favor Piero della Francesca—and it is fashionable to exalt him above Michael Angelo—may indulge their preference in a large monograph cast in a choice format and illustrated in full color.

To those seeking a Christmas purchase of impeccable taste and moderate price, the monograph on "French Masters" is recommended, a volume which reproduces flawlessly the elegance and charm of the best of the French draftsmen. Finally, there is the Red menace again. Professor Harap, formerly a Harvard librarian, after ponderously expounding Marxist doctrine, has the effrontery to tell us that the arts are flourishing behind the Iron Curtain, when every informed reader knows that there are no painters and sculptors worth mentioning in Russia.

Class of '68 Has a Gloomy Job Prospect

THE MARKET FOR COLLEGE GRADUATES. By Seymour E. Harris. Harvard. $4.

"MY MAIN purpose" in writing this book, Dr. Harris explains, "is to show that a large proportion of the potential college students within the next 20 years are doomed to disappointment after graduation . . ." The number of jobs which college graduates will seek will be substantially less than the number seeking them.

And Dr. Harris assuredly achieves his purpose. He shows with telling statistics that the number enrolled in college has been increasing rapidly. Today there are from 2.5 to 4.6 million college graduates; by 1968 there will be from 10.6 to 14.5 million. Most of these graduates have in the past, and likely will in the future, enter the professions, or seek positions of responsibility in business.

But there is little likelihood that there will be a sufficient need in 1968 for doctors, lawyers, teachers, engineers, ministers and the like to provide openings for all whom the colleges will turn out. Similarly, there is little prospect, Dr. Harris concludes, that business can use in positions of responsibility all the college graduates that will be on the market then.

The evidence is clear that, in the past, education has paid. College graduates, by and large, earned much more than non-college graduates. "In the future, however," Dr. Harris warns, "it may not pay to be educated. College men and women may receive, on the average, less pay than manual workers generally."

More serious than the prospect of relatively lessened income for college graduates is the frustration and disappointment that looms ahead. This demands, at least, the only solution Dr. Harris suggests: "increased and improved vocational guidance for parents and students in the adaptation of supply to demand and in a greater concentration on the non-economic gains of education as well as on the social (as against the private) profit."

In a Nutshell

TARRY FLYNN. By Patrick Kavanaugh. Devin-Adair. $2.75.

STRAIGHT from the bogs and praties, this unadorned and many times unflattering picture of rural Ireland is peculiarly uneventful. Yet despite the lack of climaxes to which readers of novels have become so accustomed, in "Tarry Flynn' it is the very bareness that is enjoyable. Tarry is a peasant whose poetic fervor is not in keeping with the earthy humor of his neighbors. If Mr. Kavanaugh means to carry on Tarry's life from the time he put on his good suit and walked away from the family homestead, it is hoped he will do so with the same vitality he has shown here. This is the first book published in America by Mr. Kavanaugh, who has the reputation in his own country of being its most authentic writer on modern rural life. "Tarry Flynn" was banned in Ireland when it first appeared, but later, for reasons not given, the ban was lifted.

NEWBERY AND CALDECOTT AWARDS, A Bibliography of First Editions. By Irvin Kerlan, M.D. University of Minnesota. $2.

THE first John Newbery Medal for the juvenile judged the most distinguished contribution to children's literature, was awarded in 1922. The first Randolph Caldecott Medal for the children's book with the most distinguished illustrations was given in 1938. Dr. Irvin Kerlan, of Washington, who has pioneered with considerable success in the collecting of outstanding contemporary children's books, has now compiled a bibliography of the Newbery and Caldecott prize books. Frederic G. Melcher, editor of Publishers Weekly and originator of the prizes awarded annually by the children's librarians of the American Library Association, has contributed the foreword.

UNDERSTANDING THE JAPANESE. By Cornelia Spencer. Aladdin. $3.75.

A KINDLY history of the Japanese, written for young people. The author leans heavily on the findings of such anthropologists as Ruth Benedict in her interpretation of the national character of the people. In place of a sense of right and wrong, she finds, the Japanese culture has "substituted loyalty to the pattern of living, or following the rules of life." The Second World War and the possible development of peaceful democratic ways are considered in the light of this value emphasis and the tradition of obligation to the emperor. Several interesting chapters deal with the significance of Japanese color prints and other folk arts. Prints by Hiroshige are reproduced as illustrations.

HOW TO TAKE A CASE BEFORE THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD. By Louis G. Silverberg. Bureau of National Affairs. $5.

MOST book blurbs crow much too loudly about the talents of the author. But the publishers of this text on NLRB activity missed a bet in neglecting to point out that Lou Silverberg is considered a fount of knowledge by Washington's corps of labor reporters, writers and editors.

Mr. Silverberg, an authority on the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, is information director for the NLRB, has watched the board over the years from close hand.

For attorneys, labor leaders and businessmen who have occasion to deal with the NLRB, for the student of employer-employe relations, Mr. Silverberg's text is advisedly recommended.—SAM STAVISKY.

Costly Mistakes Shown in Soviet State Farming

THE SOCIALIZED AGRICULTURE OF THE USSR. By Naum Jasny. Stanford, 837 pp. $7.50.

ONE OF THE many secrets Russia has tried to keep from the world is the dangerous shortcomings of her socialized agriculture, the mainstay of her existence.

Naum Jasny, Russian-born authority on Soviet agriculture, reveals in this exhaustive study that the Soviet Union's entire economy may indeed collapse should present problems of socialized agriculture remain unsolved.

The "Sovkhozy" or state farms, according to Jasny, have lost ground not only by being brutally compulsive but also because they "absorbed unexpectedly large investments and turned out such costly products that they soon had to be relegated to a minor role."

The "Kolkhozy" or collective farms are now generally emphasized, Jasny asserts, not "because of their ability to produce abundantly and cheaply" but because price or production losses can be shifted onto the peasants.

And as to how all this is possible, Jasny declares that "the collective farm system, as it is organized and operated in the Union, is certainly incompatible with any other political system. No other regime would have the military-economic power to enforce it . . ."—EDWIN D. GRITZ.

Notes on the Margin

Vermont Virility in Book Design

By Lee Grove

OUT of sight of the audience, the director coaches his little Trilby along to success. And at the end of the act it is the Trilby who gets the applause and bouquets.

DOUGLAS

Book designers occupy a position somewhat analogous to that of directors in the theater. They help the author — who has probably already been sharpened up by an editor—to put his best foot forward. When the book clicks, there are cries of "Author! Author!" but never any for the editor who made the sentences intelligible, or the designer who lured the reader into the book and then made the lines of type the right length for ready reading.

Fortunately, audiences are growing more sophisticated, and this situation is beginning to improve. The appreciation of good book design is becoming widespread, and designers are beginning to achieve followings beyond their own professional circles.

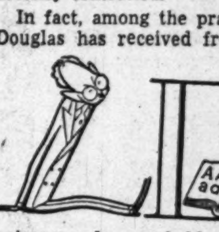
Among the Nation's leading designers is Lester Douglas, and he is currently being brought out of the wings for bouquets—an exhibition of his work at the Library of Congress until January 2, a dinner given by the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Graphic Arts, tomorrow night, at which tribute will be paid to his work by Paul Bennett of New York, head of the Typophiles, and others.

DOUGLAS, who uses an italic "L" and a roman "D" for a personal device (see illustration), is director of art and printing for the United States Chamber of Commerce, including Nation's Business. As such, Douglas, who has held the post since 1928, has largely been concerned with printing more ephemeral than books, but he has found time for bookwork, and it is to his bookwork that the Library of Congress exhibition is devoted.

There are books printed for the Limited Editions Club ("Travels of Marco Polo," 1934; Peattie's "An Almanac for Moderns," 1938) and a host of books small in size but all involving problems of design.

Douglas has met each problem full tilt, with colors flying—in fact with so much color that at times the books have all the cheerful abandon of a ballet scene from "Oklahoma!" But the abandon is only seeming; it is artfully controlled.

In fact, among the praise that Douglas has received from connoisseurs he probably cherishes most that of the late Edward Laroque Tinker: "Your page has life and a sane gaiety, with no superfluous decoration, the straightforward virility of Vermont without the sophisticated floridity of France. What I am trying to say is that your typographic design has real American roots and could not have been produced by a man of any other nationality."



TO GIVE but one example of Douglas' active mind, there is a little book, "Origin of the Star Spangled Banner," in the show. The lines of type on the right side of the pages are uneven, not because of any subscription to Eric Gill's theory of the spacing between words, but to suggest the ragged edges of the battle-worn flag pictured on the title page.

Douglas, who was born in Manhattan in 1893 and deflected in youth from a career as an illustrator to magazine and book design, was nurtured on the classical work of Bruce Rogers and D. B. Updike, and yet was once described as "a rabid and rampant modernist."

The "Origin of the Star Spangled Banner" exemplifies his belief that while not losing touch with the past "we can and should keep step with the contemporary . . . and that rather vague 'allusive' quality that writers are fond of quoting can be had with forms new and alive."

Who Will Cast the First Stone?

By Harry N. Stull

AT A recent meeting of the Arkansas Avenue Citizens Association, Police Capt. Archie M. Winfree called attention to certain police regulations. These regulations, promulgated by the District Commissioners, have the force of law unless voided by the courts as unreasonable. The following may, from time to time, make law violators of us all:

STULL

Dogs running at large must be on leash at all times, and no person shall permit a dog to be confined in any yard or inclosure or in any private property or auto in such manner that the dog can menace or bite a person using public space. A violation may cost you as much as $300.

Any person who at late and unusual hours of the night disturbs the peace and quiet of the neighborhood by any loud and unusual noise may be fined not to exceed $300.

To plant a hedge, you must first obtain a permit from the Engineer Department. Such hedge must not exceed 3 feet in height and shall not project more than 6 inches over the sidewalk.

No person shall own or keep any fowl, parrot or bird which, by crowing, cackling, talking or singing, shall disturb the peace and quiet of the neighborhood.

In order to keep chickens, a permit must be first secured, provided there is first obtained the consent of all the householders and property owners within 100 feet of the boundaries of the premises upon which such fowl are to be kept. Maximum fine for violation is $300.

Garbage cans must not exceed 10 gallons in capacity.

Trash must be kept in closed containers not to exceed 30 gallons in capacity.

No person shall shake, beat or otherwise treat rugs or other articles in such a manner as to cause dust to settle upon other premises.

All gates in parking fences must swing inward, and no gate shall swing outward over any sidewalk or street.

Owners and occupants of premises having street and alley entrances shall cause to be placed street and number designations in letters and figures not less than 2 inches in height in rear or on side of premises.

If you have never violated any one of these provisions, you should be given a citation.

These regulations, designed to assist in the orderly conduct of life in this city, should be given wider publicity. While ignorance of the law may be no excuse, in all fairness some effort should be made to publicize these regulations in order that we may not become unintentional law violators.

Anchoring the Bridge

THERE seems to be no opposition to the plan to build another bridge across the Anacostia River, but the controversy over where it is to be located goes merrily on. The Highway Department favors the East Capitol st. site, while the National Capital Park and Planning Commission seems to favor the Massachusetts ave. site. Various citizens' organizations in the eastern part of the city have recorded themselves as favoring one or the other site. No doubt there will be a congressional hearing on the matter and that body will ultimately determine where the bridge is to be located. The tremendous increase in traffic over the Benning and Sousa Bridges has made this project an immediate necessity.

Sex Offense a Felony

REPRESENTATIVE CHELF of Kentucky has suggested a law making a sex crime committed against a child a Federal offense. The District is more fortunate than some other jurisdictions, since last year Congress enacted a District law taking that offense out of the misdemeanor class and making it a felony punishable by as much as 10 years' imprisonment, and at the same time making possible psychiatric treatment of such criminals. While from our standpoint the making of such offenses Federal crimes would be of doubtful value, credit should be given the Congressman for again focusing our attention on these loathsome crimes. If it should develop that our own law is insufficient to remove from our midst these degenerates, then some other remedy must be sought. The nature of the offenses requires drastic treatment to protect the community.

Fly-by-Night Builders

A NUMBER of citizens' groups are concerned with the problem of licensing builders in the District. The agitation stems from the fact that persons have been victimized by certain builders who have used inferior materials and misrepresented the facts in the sale of homes. A law regulating the operations of builders probably would be favored by the real estate organizations which have won the confidence of the public over the years. It might eliminate these fly-by-night individuals who operate as builders here until they have sold their houses and then move on to another jurisdiction. The Federation of Citizens Associations has been requested to make a thorough investigation of the whole matter.

Red Hot Items Await Assembly

By Benjamin Muse

THE session of the General Assembly which will open January 11 will not be an entirely peaceful affair.

The House of Delegates will start off with an airing of the alleged voting frauds in Russell County, incidental to the seating of either John W. Fletcher or Mrs. Turner Gilmer as Delegate from that district. Everybody would like to get the row over one way or another with a minimum of fuss, but the majority happens to be of the same political persuasion as the candidate who was defeated on the vote count, so her side will get plenty of opportunity to present its case, and you never know where that sort of thing will end.

MUSE

Then, when they begin to throw bills into the hopper, such red-hot items as the following will be introduced:

A bill to repeal the absent voters law.

A bill to repeal the Tuck election law.

A bill for the calling of a limited constitutional convention to consider the elimination of the poll tax.

A bill to undo the 1948 consolidation of the Department of Public Welfare and the Department of Corrections.

The organization, which was never stronger in the General Assembly—by a roll call of the members who voted for Battle in the primary—will turn thumbs down on the proposal for repeal of the poll tax by constitutional convention, but the plan will be fought through to the end, nevertheless.

One-Man Tornado

AS LEADER of the anti-Byrd machine contingent, Delegate Robert Whitehead can count on only a small following—not over half a dozen, on the primary line-up—but as Robert Whitehead he is a pretty formidable member. In the 1948 session he was voted "the most useful member of the General Assembly" by the representatives of the press in Richmond.

Whitehead is going to fight for the convention every step of the way. If the Committee on Privileges and Elections refuses to report the bill, Whitehead told this writer last week that he will ask for the discharge of the committee. So look for some fireworks there.

Reports of two commissions, the Duke Commission and the Tax Study Commission, will also give the legislators substantial meat to chew on—that is, if the report of the latter is completed in time to be chewed. Shrouded in secrecy thus far, the tax study report is now hopefully expected to be released next Friday.

The Duke Commission's report has some interesting angles, apart from its revelation of crying needs in the State's mental hospitals. For instance, the commission was rightly applauded for digging out the fact that the State was paying $100,000 too much for printing, but nobody has said anything about who was to blame. If that kind of racket has been allowed, somebody has been asleep somewhere.

A Jolt for Battle

RICHMOND commissions generally come up with something pretty much in harmony with the plans of the powers that be, but Governor-elect Battle can hardly have relished having a 52-million-dollar hospital program thrown on the carpet at this time. The State is already going to have to sell its shirt to raise the 57 million dollars "immediately," plus 15 million dollars a year thereafter, which Battle promised for school construction.

Incidentally, the commission job helped the State to discover Charlie Duke, suave but dynamic bursar of William and Mary College. He is likely to be heard from again.

What happens when people don't do what the General Assembly of Virginia tells them to do? The Tax Study Commission was directed by the General Assembly to report by November 15. Here it is December 11, and no report.

Whatever it may eventually bring forth, the Tax Study Commission has already rendered yeoman service to Governor Tuck as an alibi. Throughout 1948 the clamor for a special session of the General Assembly to vote money for school construction—in which 67 Boards of Supervisors joined—was invariably met with the reply: "We must wait until the Tax Study Commission reports and we can see where we are."

Came the 1949 primary campaign, however, and the Tax Study Commission was forgotten. Battle went right ahead and promised the money for schools "immediately" upon his inauguration. But the commission has still to report.

'Bugs' Found in 10-Year-Old Law

By James P. Connolly

IT NEVER rains but it pours. With the Legislature called into special session to reenact the 50-million-dollar State school loan, botched at the last regular meeting, complaint has been made that another important law adopted 10 years ago also contains some serious "bugs."

CONNOLLY

Since the termites in the other act have been found finally, the special session may be doubly timely. The other law has to be clarified by the Assembly or the Court of Appeals, or both. If the court does not act in the meantime, the Assembly may be able to delouse both bills at the same sitting.

The other act is the State's search and seizure law, passed in 1939 and signed by former Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor. Its constitutionality has been challenged on the ground that it contains—or presents—a pretty mixup in amendments. The mixup came to light in a recent bookmaking trial in Baltimore County.

Defense attorneys said the act contains one amendment that never was passed and completely omits another that was. The first amendment makes certain statements subject to perjury. The attorneys argued that it was passed only by the House of Delegates. The lacking amendment voids search warrants after 15 days. The attorneys said that one was passed by both houses.

After hearing the defense arguments, Trial Judge J. Howard Murray called a halt and invited Attorney General Hall Hammond to submit a brief for the State.

There were quick repercussions in Baltimore City. The city courts felt impelled to postpone a big numbers case just coming up, and State's Attorney J. Bernard Wells said it would be pointless for the courts to try any other gambling cases involving search warrants until the law had been clarified.

Court dockets are crowded with pending cases—and that's not all. There have been hints that defendants already tried and convicted may move for new trials. Notice of a new trial motion already has been served by one defense attorney. All in all, a nice howdy-do.

Prosecutors and judges have asked the Appeals Court to act promptly. In addition, Wells has suggested that the law might best be remedied by legislation, if it is found defective, and he has mentioned that the special session would be "timely"—if Hammond concurs.

Further, it so happens that both defense attorneys in the bookmaking case at Towson are members of the Legislature—Senator John Grason Turnbull of Baltimore County, and Delegate Jerome Robinson (D., Fourth, Balto.).

They have readied a bill to correct what they consider the loophole in the law and have presented it to the Legislative Council. The council hasn't yet decided whether to recommend the measure.

By coincidence, the dissatisfaction with both the school loan and the search and seizure law came to light from the same source—the Legislative Journal. Passage of the loan act was journalized under the wrong title. On that account, the Appeals Court held in a friendly test case that the loan had not been passed, so the special session was called—at a cost of about $10,000.

Coming more or less together, the challenges to the two laws might suggest a high percentage of error in the operations of the paper work of the Assembly. But such is hardly the case. In the main, the paper work is handled creditably and efficiently, considering the volume and the circumstances.

Responsibility for the clerical error invalidating the school loan has been assumed frankly by Walter Addison, Senate journal clerk. Addison doesn't know whether the mistake was made by him or his assistant, J. Frank Lupo, and neither does Lupo.

Nevertheless, Addison has conceded that it was his fault that the error was not caught. It was the only error that got to the courts in his 20 years as journal clerk. He is a farmer and former legislator, living at Mitchellville.

Mention has been made of the conditions under which the paper work of the Legislature is done. Conditions are worst, of course, at the close of a session. The hours are long and the bill are many. About half of them are small local measures. If the Legislature could relieve itself of them, it would have more time and effort to devote to more important matters.

psychologist is added to the school staff by the county.

Clash of Traditions

"IT IS THE hardest kind of work to give people a sense of security in these empty, soulless housing projects without any of the amenities for civilized living that are taken for granted in an American community," said a prominent citizen who is in close touch with the school system. "Often they have as yet no churches or schools, no libraries, no health and welfare departments except remote ones, no shops, banks, movie houses or outdoor recreation that can be easily reached. There is a neighborly feeling in some areas, but in others there is mutual indifference or active hostility. The people all have different kinds of problems. Families with different traditions live side by side, one conservative, one liberal. Both traditions have their good points but the disciplines are different and this causes conflict. Often these families come from fine communities and were active in them. Now they have no community—only 600 houses. Their children come to us with excellent school records, but to establish status among their new acquaintances they acquire bad habits, bad language and a general air of defiance. Under such living conditions and the inevitable problems they create, the schools have a role of such fundamental importance that it is difficult to understand it in our older communities."

"Of 150 children of preschool age in the kindergartens whom we have examined," said Mr. Knight, supervisor of pupil personnel, "20 percent show symptoms of emotional disturbances that promise to become acute unless they receive special treatment. All of our county health and welfare agencies are working out efficient methods of cooperating with the schools, but even with our better than average personnel resources, it is impossible to reach all of the children who need guidance and treatment.

"Formerly the older children were our chief concern. It is a new social phenomenon that most of our efforts at guidance have to be devoted to the very young."

Day-Long Attention

MANY OF the elementary school teachers are constantly with the children from 8:15, when the first bus load arrives, all day long, even through lunch, until 5 o'clock. Many children of preschool age are kept through double sessions of the kindergarten because there is nobody at home. After the last child leaves, the teachers spend another hour keeping their registration records up to date and doing other paper work. Some teachers have left, even though Montgomery County pays high wages, because they cannot stand the physical and emotional strain.

"Salaries are not the only answer," said Mrs. Agnes Kain, principal of the Kensington Elementary School, which is making an intelligent effort to meet the excessive need of these youngsters for affection with wisdom and restraint. "Even with good salaries the job is just too exacting and too heavy for some people."

NEXT SUNDAY: Can even wealthy Montgomery County carry the load of school construction with which it is obviously faced for years to come?

Some Prayed, Some Gave Blood —And Mike's Feeling Better

MICHAEL JOSEPH LOUGHRIN, 13, wouldn't swap all the treasures on earth—not even his new three-fingered baseball glove—for his friends.

Just a few weeks ago, the chances of Mike's getting well were slim. He lay gravely ill in Children's Hospital, suffering from an infection at the base of his skull which impinged upon the brain in that area. He was so ill that the family priest administered the last sacrament at the boy's bedside.

But, by the grace of God, plasma, prayers, penicillin, pediatricians and policemen—to say nothing of Red Cross blood donors and big league baseball and football players with a soft spot in their hearts for a sick child—Mike lives today.

Mike, who lives at 1503 30th st. nw., was taken to Children's August 30 in critical condition. For many days he had high fever. At one critical stage of the sickness, Mike's dad, Joseph Loughrin, who is a Twelfth Precinct detective, talked to a personal friend, Ray Brennan, about Mike's condition.

"If we could only get him interested in something," worried Detective Loughrin.

Brennan, who is also a friend of little Mike's, recalled that the boy is an avid ball fan and started pulling some wires. In almost no time, the nurse attending Mike was reading the lad a telegram:

"Good luck, Mike. Keep your chin up and you'll soon be out playing ball. Keep rooting for the Red Sox. Your pal, Ted Williams."

Says Mike's dad: "That telegram broke his fever. It dropped four points and he immediately took a turn for the better.

Appeal by Teletype

BUT that was not the end of Mike's illness. There were many other days when the will to live needed firming and his body needed strength to endure the malady. Other friends helped, too.

For instance, Mike needed blood transfusions, and while the Red Cross was able to send blood immediately from stocks on hand, there was no assurance there would be enough for the numerous transfusions. Maj. Robert J. Barrett and Inspector Floyd A. Truscott sent out an appeal for blood donors on the police teletype. The Red Cross Blood Center at 1730 E st. nw. was soon the focal point for Mike's father's friends and fellow workers—police radio car men, sergeants, corporals, patrolmen and even rookies. Many knew Mike's dad; some knew Mike personally, but a lot of them just knew a little boy needed blood. Says Mike's dad:

"Cops are kind of soft where a small kid is concerned. There was one officer who used to chase little Mike and his playmates out of an alley in our neighborhood. The kids thought he was tough. But when he heard that Mike was in the hospital, this officer was one of the first to go to the Red Cross and roll up his sleeve for a blood donation. When I saw him after that, he said to me: 'Tell Mike that Officer Smith ain't so bad after all. I want him to know I gave blood for him.'

"There were friends of the family who donated, also. We will never be able to thank them—or the Red Cross—enough."

Dr. Herbert D. Glick, the pediatrician who cared for Mike, in consultation with several other specialists, says: "There is no doubt that blood played a highly important part in Mike's recovery.

"Blood was given to prepare him for surgery and this was highly important. Then Mike was given blood while on the operating table to counteract the possible effects of post-operative shock. And he was given blood transfusions to aid in convalescence.

"Mike also had millions of units of penicillin, he received chloromycetin, as well as streptomycin and sulfadiazine. You can't put your finger on any one thing or person to credit with his recovery, but all helped."

Mike's illness began with a cold and a bad draining ear. Within 24 hours, paralysis of the left side of the face set in, accompanied by wavy eyeballs, double vision and a stiff neck.

Attempts were made to locate the source of the infection, and simple and radical mastoidectomies were performed.

The exact nature of the infection remained uncertain. The diagnosis was serous meningitis.

Being only human, there was a limit to the power of the pediatricians, and that's where prayer came in—and more friends.

At Holy Trinity Church, which Mike used to attend, the congregation prayed one Sunday for the lad's recovery. There were nuns, too, who were praying for him. One priest visited Mike every day and gave him communion whenever he was able to receive it. And the Franciscan friars of Holy Name College had 28 masses every morning in which Mike was mentioned.

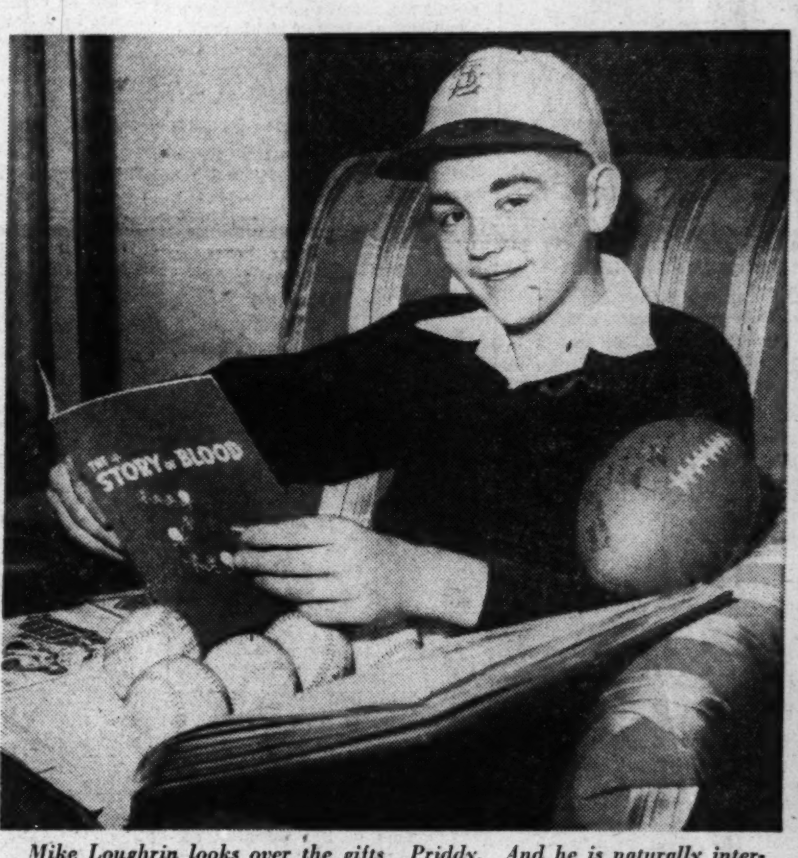
Mike's mother, who almost never left the hospital during his illness, and his dad, who spent many sleepless nights and had many consultations with doctors, were, of course, two special friends among the many.

A Wire From Happy

MIKE received so many cheering telegrams and letters while in Children's that he made a scrapbook of them. His latest addition to it is a booklet, "The Story of Blood," given him after he left the hospital by Miss Margaret Tribby, chairman of the Red Cross Motor Service unit which carries blood to Children's.

Mike showed Miss Tribby his scrapbook.

"There's Gerry Priddy's autograph," he pointed out. "Gerry came out to the hospital and wrote in my book personally. He gave me a St. Louis Browns cap, too. And see what he wrote with it." The message from the Browns second baseman read: "To Mike, a swell guy and a real ball player. Regards."



Mike Loughrin looks over the gifts he received during his six weeks at Children's Hospital, including a St. Louis Browns cap from Gerry Priddy. And he is naturally interested in his book, "The Story of Blood," which tells how the Red Cross donor system works

There was a telegram from Baseball Commissioner Happy Chandler: "I have just heard of your illness and I hope you have a speedy recovery. I will send you a baseball on my return to Cincinnati. Regards."

Happy Chandler did, too—autographed it. And some of Mike's other baseball and football friends whom he has never actually met sent him autographed balls, including Joe Kuhel, formerly of the Washington Senators; Art Passarella, Joe DiMaggio and Carl Hubbard.

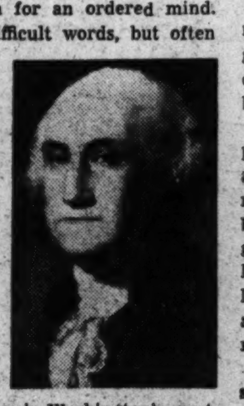
The Washington Redskins autographed a football for him. A friend of Mike's dad spent a lot of time getting that ball signed for the little boy.

Mike, who was released from the hospital 43 days after he entered, is now getting well, although he will not be able to attend school this year and won't be able to pitch with his neighborhood team for a long time. Once a hefty 129 pounds, he now weighs only 80. But he thinks he is one of the luckiest kids in the world. 'Cause he's got friends.

George W. Was Something of a Cut-Up

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

HE WAS tough . . . a complex person with a full share of stray quirks. He had a near-mania for an ordered mind. He could spell difficult words, but often slipped on the easy ones. He considered canteens filled with madeira, port and "cherry bounce" indispensable equipment on a fishing trip.



These characteristics, molded around tremendous will power and religious faith in man's independence, give a little of the true flavor of the man who will be the hero in Washington's most ambitious theatrical production. Scheduled opening night: July 4, 1950.

The central figure is pretty well-known, but the playwright promises a new, down-to-earth insight, not necessarily into what he did, but what made him do it.

The drama will keynote the Capital's Sesquicentennial celebration—figuratively bringing the hero back to life in a rustic Rock Creek Park amphitheater.

Construction of this first modern amphitheater here will begin next Saturday with ground-breaking ceremonies, which also will commemorate the anniversary of the death of the central figure.

George Washington died 150 years ago next Wednesday, a victim of acute laryngitis and failure to change from wet clothes before going to dinner the day before his death.

Modern doctors say his death at 67, apparently of a "strep throat," was probably hastened by the crude medical treatment of the day. This included four blood-lettings, a gargle of molasses, vinegar and butter which almost suffocated him; blisters of dried beetles applied to his throat, and poultices of wheat bran applied to his legs. Washington's last illness was brief; his pain extreme.

Thousands of visitors to the city next summer, the following summer and perhaps even afterward, will catch a living glimpse of George Washington through the symphonic drama now being written by Pulitzer Prize-winning Paul Green.

From his log cabin outside Chapel Hill N. C., Green talked enthusiastically last week about new sidelights he had unearthed on G. W.

The drama, he said, will be about many things: the Capital that Washington envisioned, an idea called democracy and about the man, George Washington. He's "really great and no stuffed shirt by any standards," said the author of the long-running pageants, "Lost Colony" and "The Common Glory."

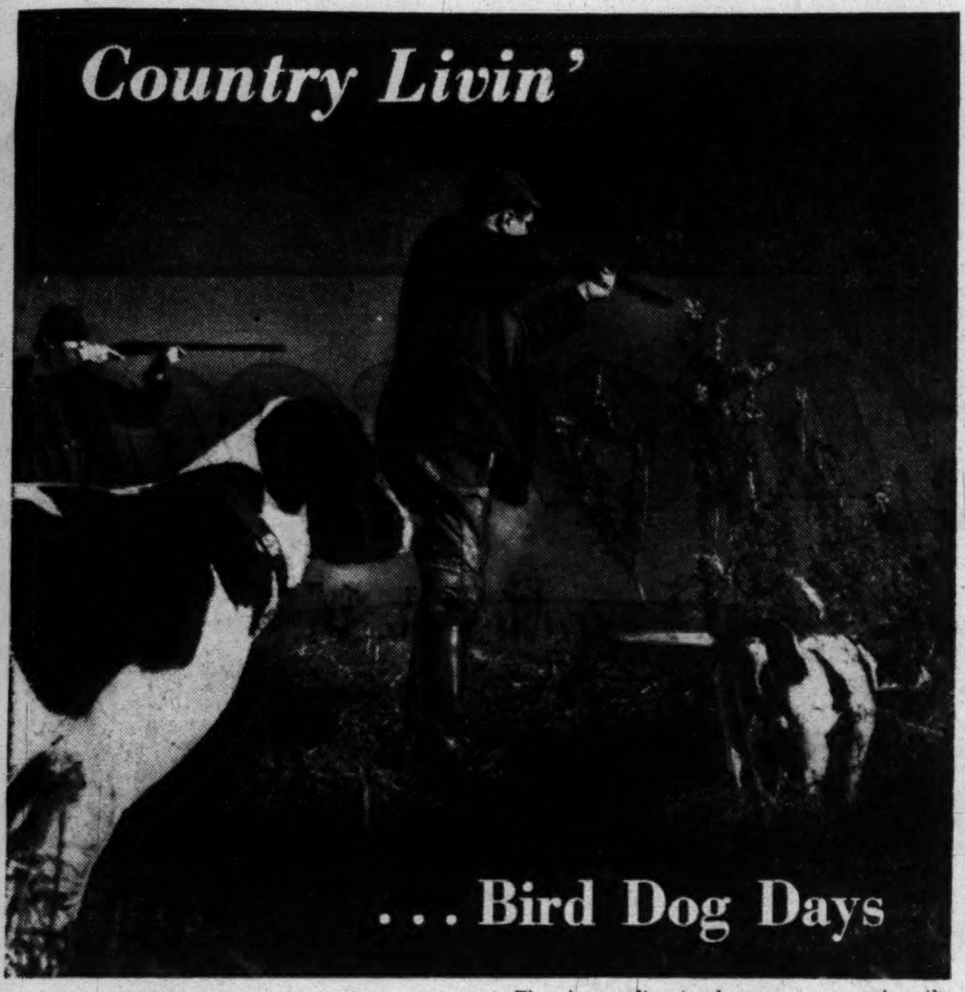
Green feels that the free-wheeling form of the symphonic drama will give him the opportunity, also, to put across a timely message.

"I am struggling to make it a thoroughly religious play, because Washington and other leaders of his time had a great sense of Christian concepts," he said. "And I think many of the fellows across the sea are not too religious today. The principles of good democracy now are pretty thin in some countries."

But, he quickly adds, "I intend to sprinkle through the story the incidental, peppery and human side of G. W. He loved to cut up, you know, and all the ladies of his time said he was some dancer—and a tireless one."

The City of Washington has never been remiss in honoring the man whose name it bears. The Washington Monument dominates the city. The George Washington Masonic National Memorial in Alexandria (Alexandria-Washington Lodge No. 22 was his own) commands the city's southern approach. Gadsby's Tavern won't let you forget the minuets he danced there, and Clark Mills' famous statue of Washington looks down from his horse in the hub of busy Washington Circle.

Washington is confident that its foremost local boy will also be a stage hit.



Country Livin'

. . . Bird Dog Days

By Aubrey Graves

THERE'S NO PRECISE time for it, but it comes each season. The weather will be clear and the air crisp from the night's frost. A light breeze will be blowing over the meadow.

All at once the fever strikes. Duties may cry at the office and affairs of great moment clamor for solution, but another urgency transcends. Even as the moon pulls and repels the tide, so does the morning, when it arrives, compel the huntsman. It's bird dog weather!

Out in the kennel the pointer feels it, trembles with excitement. Months of training and field trials are over. Practice runs have been concluded. This is it. Man and dog, bowing joyfully to the inevitable, hit for the brush.

Through barbed wire and over rail fences they go, across fields of sedge grass, into the thicket of young timber, heavy with the fragrance of wild grape flowers. The dog, keen-scented, quail-wise and biddable, ranges wider and wider, like a smooth-running, well-oiled piece of machinery.

Suddenly she wheels and her posture becomes frozen, her muscles tense, her nostrils aquiver. Her eyes, bulging with expectancy, stare ahead into vacancy, in a state of hypnotism. It's the first point of the season!

"Hold!" commands the master.

Backward he steps, gun raised, nerves braced for the explosion of wings to come.

"Easy, Lady; steady, girl!"

Now he is ready, the moment just right.

"Hie on."

The dog creeps forward, slowly, slowly. Then it comes, the moment the sportsman lives for, the flushing of the covey. His gun barrel moves in the pattern of flight, overtakes the target, then barks. Thirty yards away quail, grouse or woodcock falls.

"Dead bird," comes the announcement. The dog streaks to the spot, takes the game gently in mouth, surrenders it proudly into the master's hand.

THERE IS SOMETHING fine and ennobling about the centuries-long partnership of man and dog. How long they have lived and hunted together would be hard to fathom, but their association goes back a long, long way. Emperors and kings of antiquity spent lavish sums upon their kennels. Medieval fowlers had their setters and the falconers their springing spaniels.

In America, the setter and the pointer are true aristocrats, qualified for membership in the most exclusive pre-Revolutionary society. A spaniel, it is recorded, was a passenger with the other Pilgrims aboard the Mayflower.

What breed makes the best hunting dog? The pure-strained English pointer and the dashing, high-headed, merry-tailed English setter consistently capture the ribbons in bench and field trials. Among the rest, the Weimaraners, German short hairs, Brittany spaniels, Irish and Gordon setters have their enthusiasts.

ABOUT THE RELATIVE merits of pointer and setter, there is great debate. The setter fan claims his animal is superior around the water or in swampy regions, that he will plunge into brambles and spiny coverts which would turn the toughest pointer. And the pointer, he adds, is more subject to cold.

The pointer's partisan retorts that his protege will tackle any cover which the setter will penetrate, can stand more work in dry places, is better in warm climes and, because his hair is shorter, excels where burrs are abundant. He considers him keener-scented and tops in the instinct that brings him home.

There's no dispute, however, concerning the field versus the bench type. Performance, not beauty of conformation, is the thing. The carriage of the head is a better criterion than its shape. It's the fighting heart, not the size of the dog, that counts. The ingrained hunter, as distinct from the showman, takes the less photogenic strain with its stamina and its hustle the moment it is put down in the field.

BIRD dogs are the product of generations of selective breeding, but the puppy, for all his heredity, must still be trained. Obedience is the first, and most important, lesson and meal time should be its beginning.

The master places food before the newcomer, teaches him not to touch it, without permission. "Hold" is the word he uses—one that will be continuously useful in the field thereafter. "Come," "easy" and "go fetch" are other parts of dog language which should be limited to as few words as possible. Easiest of all to teach the beginner is retrieving, which starts with the daily game of ball.

Discount the old wheeze that you can't teach an old dog new tricks; serious training is often delayed until the novice is three. At that stage teaching can be accomplished in shorter time, with less labor, and the dog will be more retentive of instruction.

For the first 18 months the puppy needs a free rein, with lots of exercise afield, for short periods of time—freedom to chase birds, learn their habits and habitations, and regale her delicate nostrils with the delicious scent of game.

FOR THE FINISHING LESSONS, prepare a running noose collar lined with blunted horseshoe nails, pointed inward, with an outer layer of leather over the heads of the spikes. Let the learner cut all the capers she fancies; she soon sees the good sense in keeping still.

Next, teach her to lead. Taking hold of the leash, start forward, bidding her, "Come!" and oblige her to follow. By the command, "Hold," cause her to stop, tugging sharply at the leash, when necessary to emphasize the point. Walk around her in different directions, repeating, "Hold!" That teaches her to remain still.

In quail country, keep her under eye, never beyond the sound of voice. If she flushes birds too soon, or chases them when flushed, repeat the command, "hold!" The spiked collar is a constant, not inhumane, aid to obedience; remove it only after its purposes have been served.

Never let her retrieve a felled bird on the first lesson; it may make her unsteady. In due time, however, let her go for the quarry. Assist in the search, but let it be her find.

As she takes the bird in mouth, turn and walk away saying, "Come, fetch here!" If she has qualified for her diploma, she will follow. Walk up to her, bidding her, "Hold," gently take the bird from her mouth, stroking her in appreciation.

If she has mutilated it, gain her attention by raising her head, admonishing her to "take care!" or show disapproval with a firm "no!"

YOU CAN BUY A DOG, but not her affection; that, you must win. But he who feeds, pets and bathes her and becomes her boon companion, has all the factors in his favor. It is remarkable how soon, and how completely, a dog will grow to understand her master, to know all about him and love him just the same.

That, fellow sportsmen, is something warmly to be cherished in our free and benign America, where a man can still own his own dog and his own gun.

Further Tips on Mulching

MOST plants which die down to the soil surface are reasonably safe under a deep layer of snow, but, because you cannot depend on its presence, other precautions should be taken. Dry leaves, granulated peat moss, short straw, salt hay, buckwheat hulls, cocoa shells or cranberry tops will take over the task of the snow cover.

Plants which retain all or part of their foliage during the winter, even though it assumes more or less of a lifeless color, want to be shaded without becoming suffocated. Fluffed-up straw or salt hay, oak leaves or evergreen boughs meet their needs.

Old boxes, peach baskets, berry boxes or even flower pots may be used if they are large enough not to crowd the tops. Plants with soft or hairy leaves should receive a pane of glass held aloft by a couple of bricks to keep off excess winter moisture. A few evergreen twigs over the glass will provide the needed shade.

Hybrid tea roses should be covered with a mound of crumbly soil to protect at least three buds on every branch. Where winters are very severe, add a layer of straw and another layer of soil. Climbing roses may be taken from their supports. Tie the canes into bundles, lay on the ground, cover with burlap and add a 6-inch layer of soil. In less severe climates burlap may be tacked to the supports after some straw has been worked among the canes. Bend the trunks of tree roses gently until the crown can be pegged down. Cover the crown with burlap and soil.

Also wrap the trunk in strips of burlap and add a mulch over the root area. Filling the crowns with tightly packed straw and wrapping them first in burlap and then in waterproof paper will suffice where the temperature does not drop below 10 degrees.

Shrubs and trees planted since fall a year ago also need a mulch over the root area.

Doubtfully hardy shrubs will need top protection. Straw and cornstalks come in handy for this purpose. Work them among and around the branches and tie securely.

Nurseries Anticipate Record Year

THAT little vine-covered cottage in the country with roses round the door is money in the pocket of the Nation's nurserymen.

They sell the stuff dreams are made of and songs are written about. And their trees and shrubs and plants also are used for some very practical purposes, too.

This year nurserymen estimate they will sell more of their wares than ever before. As for next year, they are keeping their fingers crossed. Their business usually follows the economic ups and downs of the country as a whole. They are keeping an eye on pension plans, too. More pensions mean more planting.

Dr. Richard P. White, executive secretary of the American Association of Nurserymen, says the sale of what is known in the trade as horticultural specialties this year will run more than 500 million dollars. That's a record. The 1300 members of his association are getting a big share of that total in their trees, bushes, plants and shrubs, besides cut flowers, seeds and bulbs.

California heads the list with 14 percent of the total sales volume.

Beauty Business Boom

NEW York is in second place with 9 percent. Third place goes to Pennsylvania with 8 percent, and Illinois is fourth with 7.4 percent. But Cook County Illinois, is in second place among the counties, with Chester County, Pennsylvania, in third place.

The other States on which estimates are given are Ohio with 6.8 percent, New Jersey 4.5 percent, and Michigan 4.2 percent of the dollar volume.

A look at building construction figures throws some light on that sales pattern. Dun & Bradstreet reports New York and Los Angeles are the leading cities in value of building permits issued the first 10 months this year.

New home construction is one of the heavy sales pullers for the nurserymen. Landscaping of new homes is required by most banks and others taking a mortgage on a new home. It increases the value of the property and enhances resale value, the bankers figure.

Landscaped Subdivisions

AND that's also what building contractors figure. A new subdivision with landscaping sells better than a barren one. Picture windows in the newly popular ranch houses make generous landscaping a necessity.

Nurserymen aren't depending alone on new homes. They are reaching out aggressively to get owners of old homes to buy their wares. They are pointing out that the wisteria vining over a window isn't just for looks. It has a practical value. It shades the interior of the house from hot summer sun, and in wintertime it drops it leaves and lets the warm sun come in.

Carrying the idea farther, the nurserymen plug the virtues of a shelterbelt of plantings to keep off harsh winter winds or to impede the movement of frost toward a home.

When summer comes they longingly talk about the shade of the old apple tree. Fruit trees are becoming more popular. One large eastern suburban developer is including a selection of fruit trees on every lot. More and more classified advertisements of homes for sale carry the line—"fruit trees."

Beautifully Laid Out

OVER and above the utility of landscaping is the beauty of a well laid out garden and the satisfaction of living in it. Any nurseryman will whip out a stack of pictures to show "how you, too, can make your 60 by 100 plot look like an estate."

One thing is troubling nurserymen. That's Christmas. A great portion of their product can be promoted at Christmas time. One of the most successful stunts is a gift of roses. You select a rose bush, or other flower, from the catalogue and notify the nurseryman you want it sent to a friend. Comes Christmas, and the friend gets a big artificial rose and a gift certificate packaged in a plastic box. When spring planting time rolls around, the rose bush is shipped. Some nurserymen send only certificates.

As for pensions—nurserymen are all for them. When a man retires, he usually wants only to go fishing and putter around the garden. Horticulture, say nurserymen with finality, is the perfect hobby.

Shorter work weeks and higher wages also bring a warming smile to the nurseryman's face. It gives a man time and money to develop his hobbies at home in the garden

Evergreen Sprays and Berries Supply the Color

Homemade Wreath Befits Yule

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

CRISTMAS decorations which come from one's own garden add much interest to the holiday season. There is something about the homemade wreath or garland which puts it into the same category as the beloved Christmas tree ornaments that come out year after year, and which the family would not trade for the most exotic and expensive ornaments which are on this year's display.

It's fun to look one's garden over and try and make it produce things for Christmas. Where gardens are extensive, it is easy to collect branches and sprays of evergreens and berries, but even the small garden can supply one or more pieces of Christmas decoration.

Making Christmas wreaths and decorations has become a fine art and many members of garden clubs and other organizations produce each year not only exquisite decorations for their own homes but supply local institutions with many lovely things which bring Christmas joy to shut-ins.

Wreaths can range from simple ones made of pine or spruce to the elaborate ones done in the manner of Della Robbia with wide leaved evergreens and varied fruits. The pine or similar wreaths can be made more interesting and varied each year with the addition of berried shrubs, ribbons, bells and tinsel ornaments. Spruce and hemlock lose their needles more quickly and are best used out of doors. Pine, balsam, yew, box and ivy are best for indoor use.

Must Retain Shape

THE FOUNDATION for a wreath is an important part of its success, for a wreath must be firm and retain its shape. A good foundation and one which is at hand is a wire coat hanger pulled into a circle. The hook can be left as a hanger for the wreath or straightened out along its side.

If the best type of evergreen is scarce the first layer, tightly secured with string, can be of pine or similar evergreen with the box, holly or other material saved for the uppermost layer. A wreath to be lovely must not be skimpy so supply yourself with more materials than you think you will need before beginning operations. Novices are always astonished at the amount of material which can be absorbed in a wreath or garland.

Small wreaths can be made with rubber fruit jar rings as their foundation. These are attractive used to encircle the small fruit juice glass or the fruit cup at each place or scattered along the table. They also can be used to adorn Christmas packages.

Sprays and wreaths can be fashioned from plantings in the home garden

The making of garlands is simplified by using a strong cord or rope as the foundation which is stretched between two walls. The evergreen can then be tied on with cord or thread until the desired length is reached.

A simple table decoration for a person with a small garden and one which will last throughout the season is made by filling a bowl with damp sand and inserting a number of candles to follow the shape of the bowl—a circle or oval—or if the container is square several rows make an attractive effect. The bowl is then filled with sprigs of evergreen stuck in the sand. We have found that boxwood or even privet is good with sprigs of berried barberry.

Holly, of course, is perhaps the best of all. With the sand kept damp and candles replaced the material will keep fresh for many days. It is a good height for the dining table and can be varied year after year with different containers and color schemes.

Center of Interest

WE ARE reminded that too frequently the significance of Christmas is overlooked and that first of all it is a Holy Day. The crech under the tree is used but mantel and occasional table arrangements which contain the holy figures offer many opportunities for decoration and will prove a center of family interest.

We have seen a beautiful mantel group with the central figure a deep blue glass Mexican Madonna bottle. The other figures were blue and white and the background sprays of yew, glistening with artificial snow and bright blue Christmas tree balls.

Artificial snow can be used in many ways to brighten the decoration. The objection to its use is that it scatters. This can be avoided by brushing the green material with cooked starch and then dusting the snow on while the starch is still damp. A last word of warning about Christmas tree fires. The Government advises that the trees be cut on a slant and then placed in a bucket of water which will prevent the needles from drying out.

Select Trees Carefully to Fit the Area

By Alfred Putz

ONE cannot be too careful in the selection of trees for his property.

If the area is large, oaks, maples, buttonwood, willows and elms may be all right if placed where they belong, but they do not fit on the small place. They look well enough while young but in a few years they spoil the balance and leave few sunny spots to grow other things. The smaller the plot, the greater the need for using only trees of limited height.

If one is planning an outdoor living room not less than 30 feet wide, an apple tree may be chosen for the far end of the garden. A standard apple, about as big a tree as is practical, provides beauty, fruit and shade. Plant in the center of a 25-foot circle to give it plenty of space.

Among the strictly ornamental small trees none is more popular than the flowering dogwood (Cornus Florida). It is native from Massachusetts to Florida and prefers good drainage and a soil on the poor side.

The white floral bracts are attractive in May. In time it will make a low, spreading head with horizontal branches arranged in tiers. The average height is 15 feet but many old specimens are more than twice that size. There also is a pink-flowered form, considered even more beautiful by many.

The Kousa dogwood (C. kousa) also has white bracts, but they are pointed. This blooms right after the native variety, when the flowers are less likely to be nipped by frost.

The star magnolia (Magnolia stellata) is another beauty. Starry fragrant white flowers 3 inches across are carried on even small plants. There also is a variety with the outside of the petals flushed pink. This is offered as stellata rosea. Even old plants seldom are more than 10 feet tall. They branch from the ground up and are almost as broad as tall.

Crabapples Hardy

OF CRABAPPLES there are plenty. They are hardy and vary from 8 to 30 feet in height. Most are broader than tall and that must be taken into account when they are placed.

Bechtel's flowering crab (Malus ioensis plena) grows 15 feet tall and is one of the best. It does not bear fruits, but in May the large, double, fragrant pink blooms turn the tree into a mass of color. The Arnold crab (M. arnoldiana) is a hybrid with rose-colored flowers changing to white. It has small yellow fruit and also grows 15 feet tall.

The Japanese flowering crab (M. floribunda) is especially hardy. This grows from 10 to 20 feet tall and may be twice as broad. The great masses of carmine-pink flowers change to pink and finally to white. They are followed by small red fruits.

The Sargent crab is another good one, only 8 feet tall, but as much as 12 feet across. The white flowers are followed by dark red fruit. For crabapple jelly, plant a Dolgo (M. dolgo) which grows 20 feet in height.

Hawthorn Attractive

FOR a dwarf tree with brilliant scarlet flowers nothing is more gorgeous than Paul's scarlet thorn (Crataegus oxyacantha pauli). It is one of the best hawthorns, developing into a round-headed tree 15 feet tall and giving in late May and June a month-long display of double, fiery scarlet blooms.

The double-flowering peach (prunus or amygdalus persica) which comes in white and red is magnificent. It is about 25 feet tall but is not hardy except where edible peaches can be grown.

The snowdrop tree or silverbell (halesia carolina or tetraphera) grows 30 feet tall. It is hardy as for north as Massachusetts. Loaded in May with snowdrop-like white bells, strung along the slender branches, it adds a charming effect to the spring garden. Its irregular windswept habit adds to its grace.

Redbud (cercis canadensis) does not always make a good tree. Its lanky growth where no main trunk has been established, nevertheless, is interesting and pleasant to look at.

The native mountain ash (Sorbus americana) is especially appreciated for its gorgeous autumn display of orange berries. In time it may grow 30 feet tall.

JAPANESE maples (Acer japonicum) and the shadbush (Amelanchier canadensis) may be trained from bush form into small trees by judicious pruning.

Japanese flowering cherries (prunus serrulata) deserve mention because so many are planted as lawn specimens. They are by nature tall trees and even with careful pruning it is difficult to keep them within reasonable limits without destroying much of their beauty. Their hardiness is limited to where edible cherries can be grown.

With all of these it pays to start with specimens of fair size, even if it squeezes the garden budget. Small plants usually take too long to give the effect the gardener is looking for when he plans any kind of tree.

IF IN THE SPRING you are up in the air about what to plant under the ground, if your so-lovely American Beauties wind up crammed in a vase, here is your perfect cure-all.

Become a student in a concentrated two-day course on flowers sponsored by the Rappahannock Valley Garden Club on January 24 and 25.

Titled School of Arrangements, Horticulture and Judging for Amateur Flower Shows, the course will be held at St. George's Episcopal Church, Fredericksburg, Va.

Mrs. Henry M. Kistner of Long Island, coauthor of "Flower Arrangements for the American Home," will be the instructor, according to Mrs. George Benoit, chairman.

The class schedule includes: Tuesday, January 24: 10 a. m. to 12 noon, horticulture and judging of specimens by point scoring; 1:30-3:30 p. m., flower show practise and judging, both artistic and horticulture.

Caps Turn Back Fort Wayne, 75 to 69

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

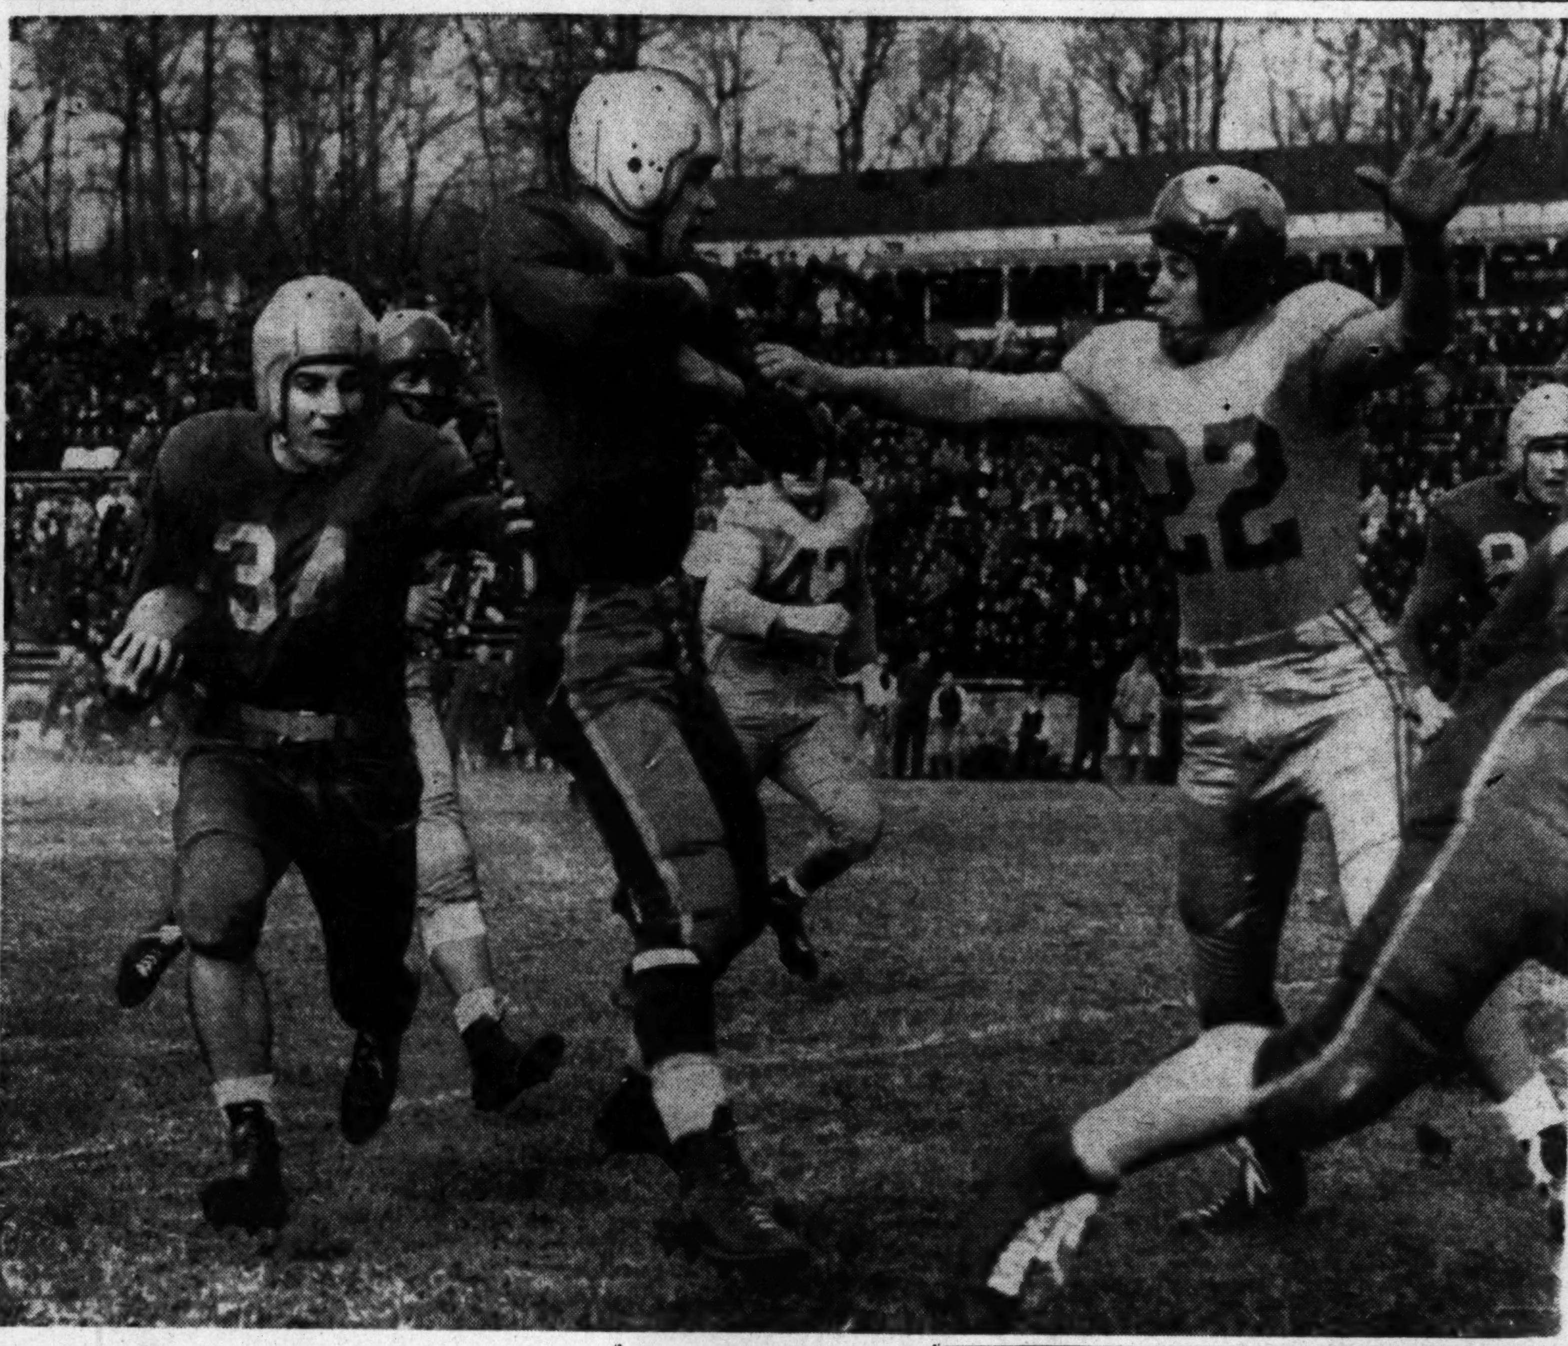
PEACE CAME TO the warring pro football leagues only after they kept the blabbermouths away from the conference table. Not a club owner sat in at the negotiations, at the express wish of NFL Commissioner Bert Bell who said they ruined last year's merger attempt . . . the only conferees were Bell and J. Arthur Friedlund, New York Yankees' attorney who represented the All-America Conference with full powers to act, as Bell has from the NFL . . . Horace Stoneham, owner of the New York baseball Giants actually set the negotiations in motion. Alarmed at the dwindling football rentals in the Polo Grounds, he asked Bell to meet with Friedlund in New York nine days ago. From that conference stemmed the merger that was completed after long sessions between the two men on Thursday and Friday . . . Bell was voted a ten-year contract as high commissioner by the two leagues, but he won't sign it . . . "I never had a contract as commissioner for the NFL, and the moment they don't want me in the job, or I don't want the job, I'll step down," says Bell . . . the AAC didn't ditch the Chicago Hornets, explained Bell, saying "They wanted out." . . . the enlarged league will give jobs to teamless coaches with hold-over contracts, or pay them off . . . Ray Flaherty of the Hornets and Red Strader of the N. Y. Yankees are the favorites to move into the Baltimore coaching job.

Povich

NEW JERSEY REPUBLICAN leaders who gave Mrs. J. Parnell Thomas the brush-off as a candidate for the congressional seat resigned by her convicted husband want to return Harry C. Harper to Washington . . . Harper is nc stranger here. He used to be a Senator—on the payroll of the Washington Senators, back in 1916 . . . on the history-making day of July 1, 1920, Harper was pitching against Walter Johnson of the Nats at Boston. He held the Nats to seven hits and one run, but couldn't win because Johnson that day pitched the only no-hit game of his career to beat the Red Sox, 1-0 . . . returning to his New Jersey home after hanging up his baseball glove. Harper married the daughter of a high political boss, and now is esteemed as the State's liberal Republican Commissioner of Labor . . . and these days you can buy your radio and television sets from two prominent members of the Nats' infield, Mr. Sam Dente and Mr. Sherry Robertson, who are rookie salesmen at George's, 816 F st. nw. . . . the action of the Eastern football colleges in banning telecasts of their football games was an indirect slap at Notre Dame whose telecasts hurt attendance in the East . . . "It's like having Notre Dame as a counter-attraction in your own back yard when you're playing a home game and the Irish are on television," moaned one Eastern official.

CLARK GRIFFITH, who calls General Manager George Weiss of the Yankees "unreasonable" because he says Weiss is always demanding extra players in a deal, actually doesn't like it because Weiss is stealing his own tactics . . . his best friends are trying to talk Griffith out of dealing for Dick Wakefield of the Tigers, and are having a hard time doing it . . . Al Wistert has been claiming most of the headlines as the Philadelphia Eagles' all-star tackle, but those who know the Eagles best say Wistert isn't even the best tackle on his own team. That honor, they say, belongs to Vic Sears . . . Jack Dempsey is willing to bet that Joe Louis will fight for the title again, saying, "How else is Joe going to get the kind of money he's accustomed to spending? He'll fight Ezzard Charles in June" . . . because of the 2-hour difference in time, the Los Angeles Rams will know before today's game with the Redskins whether it means anything. The results of the Bears-Cardinals game will be in by that time, and if the Bears lose, the Rams can clinch the Western Division title, win or lose . . . Buddy Baer, who once floored Joe Louis, is now touring the night clubs as a crooner, and advertises himself as "The working girls' Gable." . . . no handicapper among the 20 making race selections for the New York papers can show a profit since April 1 . . . and a $2 flat play on all of their selections would leave you in the red to the painful tune of $8848.

DO YOU HAVE A a knocked-out fighter on your hands? Don't (a) rub his neck, (b) shake his head, (c) slap his face, (d) try to arouse him with an ammonia inhalant . . . all of those tactics are warned against by the National Boxing Association's latest bulletin, which declares it dangerous to "maul" a man while his reflexes are subnormal . . . its best advice is to allow an unconscious boxer to remain "as is" until he has fully regained consciousness and can walk away without aid . . . and Michigan is experimenting with a ninety-second rest between rounds, instead of the traditional one minute . . . Bob Williams, the Baltimore boy who is now rated among the fanciest quarterbacks in Notre Dame history, is helping the Colts to raise $250,000 before the start of next season. He sent two of his ND helmets, autographed, to Baltimore, to be auctioned to buyers of Colt tickets . . . and Williams, before the merger of the two pro leagues, was trying to persuade Teammate Leon Hart to join the Colts who had the draft rights to him . . . Dan Parker's was the best commentary on the incongruous character of the National Basketball Association when he asked "How does it feel to Sheboygan to be in the same league with New York?"



'Stop Right There, I Am Protecting This Little Guy'

Ben Moore, blocking back for the Quantico Marines, throws up his elbows in front of Steve Zakula, Camp Lejeune, as if to say, "You've gone far enough, man, I'm protecting this little guy." No. 34, the little guy, is Calhoun Killeen, 5-foot-8 ball-carrier, off on a 20-yard run in yesterday's game at Quantico for the All-Navy East Coast title. Quantico won, 34-14.

Pistons Stop Jack Nichols; Fred Schaus Scores 19

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

An almost mechanical brilliance at the foul line ended the Washington Caps' losing streak at three games last night, the local National Basketball Association outfit turning in a 75-69 triumph over the Fort Wayne Pistons at Uline Arena.

A slim and slightly bored gathering of 1701 fans saw the Caps click on 35 out of 43 shots from the charity ring. The Pistons, meanwhile, were making good on all but nine of their 34 free throws.

The victory, which had no effect on Washington's third place standing in the Eastern Division, came with the help of only one field goal by the Caps' ace scorer, Jack Nichols. That came midway of the final period as the Pistons' Charlie Black performed an excellent job of defense until he fouled out.

Reiser Leads Caps

Chick Reiser, as a result, checked in the biggest chunk of Washington scoring — and from the foul line. The "old pro" missed only one of the 10 one-pointers offered him, finishing with a total of 13 points.

He was six behind Fort Wayne's Fred Schaus, however. The clever West Virginian started fast and then coasted to scoring honors for the game before he, too, was waved out on fouls. In all the invaders lost three on personal fouls, Washington only Bones McKinney with less than a minute left.

Fort Wayne, which went into the game boasting 10 victories in 15 games, was within striking distance for most of the evening. But after they relinquished a 16-9 first period advantage there didn't seem to be any real hope for them.

Washington squirmed into a 31-28 margin at halftime, upped that to 51-34 after three quarters and then scored just enough points to stay ahead.

A fast break was being utilized by the winners and although they generally penetrated Fort Wayne's deefnses, the Caps were missing too many shots. They saw 44 of their 64 tosses at the basket wind up other than between the cords. The Pistons outscored Washington from the floor, 22 shots to 20, but for their extra pair of baskets they took seven more shots than the Caps.

In the preliminary, the CYO unlimited team defeated Fort Belvoir, 64-48.

Quantico Wins East Coast Title, 34-14

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Quantico, Va., Dec. 10.—Quantico reasserted its service supremacy here today before 10,000, trampling Camp Lejeune Marines, 34-14, to win the All-Navy East Coast championship.

Quantico's surprisingly easy victory on the frozen Butler Stadium turf earned it a trip to sunny California for next Saturday's All-Navy title game against Camp Pendleton, Calif., Marines in the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Thus, for the second straight year, 20 percent of the Navy furnishes the two finalists. Quantico will be seeking its third straight All-Navy crown.

The All-Marine participation doesn't make the Navy brass too happy. It was conspicuous by its absence today. Beaten exactly a month ago by the Carolina Marines, 23-7, Quantico started getting even early. After all, that was Quantico's only loss to a service team in three years.

Lejeune helped the cause along when Mel (Tex) Serres, one of their good boys, fumbled the opening kickoff on his own 31. Quantico couldn't capitalize immediately, but, on the next series of downs, Rudy Flores threw a 20-yard touchdown toss to Ben Moore.

Misses First Try

Moore was all alone in the flat and raced over untouched.

Bill Eysenbach missed the first conversion. He improved with practice and made his next four shots.

Bill Minihan, 19-year-old youngster from Johnstown, Pa., got Lejeune back in the game briefly when he threw a 62-yard scoring pass to Serres. Tex grabbed it on the Quantico 23, kept his balance, and went all the way.

Serres then converted, and the Lejeune band struck up, "California, Here We Come."

Quantico's band struck it up louder when Flores, who had a special arm brace to enable him to play although doctors advised against it, passed 27 yards to the

Davis-Elkins Beats Eagles

Davis and Elkins soared into a 36-22 halftime lead and coasted to a 62-56 upset victory over American University last night at the A. U. gym.

Carl Payne, 6-foot 5-inch forward, who sparked the Elkins, W. Va., school to a similar victory over the Eagles last season, set the pace again with 25 points.

Payne bagged 16 of his points in the first half as Davis and Elkins made good on 16 out of 23 field-goal attempts. That 14-point lead held up going into the last quarter, when the Eagles failed in a last-ditch rally.

Led by 6-foot 6-inch Ronnie Garshag, who hooked in three field goals, American cut Davis and Elkins' lead to 55-51 with three minutes left, but then ran out of gas. Garshag wound up with 18 points, more than any other member of his team.

The loss was A. U.'s second straight after two victories. Davis and Elkins boasts a 3-1 record.

Harvard Bows To Navy, 70-68

Boston, Dec. 10 (AP).—Navy's cool basketball forces fended off a hard-driving Harvard finish tonight to emerge victorious, 70-68, in the Boston Garden.

Capt. Dave Mullaney, who two years ago played as a reserve for the Holy Cross national champions, paced the winners' attack with 24 points and was the focal point of the Midshipmen's floor work.

Mullaney had to take a back seat, by 1 point, to Harvard's John Rockwell, who contributed 25 to his team's losing cause.

Rockwell dunked 20 points in the second half as Harvard fought back from an 11-point deficit to 64-63, within one point of a tie.

Terps Beat W. & L. For 1st Win, 65-46

Led by Charlie Mack and Lee Brawley, Maryland defeated Washington and Lee, 65-46, at College Park last night. It was the first victory of the season for the Terps and snapped a three-game losing streak.

Mack hammered in 21 points while Brawley chipped in 16. Dave Hedge led the losing Generals with 14 points.

It was a close ball game for the first six minutes, but at that stage the Terps pulled away and stayed in front the rest of the way. They held a 28-20 halftime advantage.

In addition to their scoring, Mack and Brawley were impressive under the boards, retrieving stray shots time and again.

W. & L. continues its area swing by meeting Georgetown at Eastern High School Monday night. Maryland is idle until Wednesday, when it takes on Pennsylvania in Philadelphia.

In the preliminary George Washington Frosh downed Maryland Frosh, 65-54. Larry Silverman was high scorer for the Colonials with 20 points. It was GW's second win and spoiled the yearling Terps debut.

Tyler, Tex., Dec. 10 (AP) — The Tyler Junior College Apaches wilted the Fort Lewis Aggies with a three-touchdown first period today and rolled on to a 40-0 victory in the Texas Rose Bowl.

Catholic Beats Mt. St. Mary's

Catholic University relied on a 13 point halftime lead to nose out its Mason-Dixon Conference rival, Mount St. Mary's 61-55 last night before 1200 at the C. U. gymnasium. It was Catholic's second win in three starts.

Forwards Jim Losty and Joe Della Ratta, returning lettermen from last year's squad accounted for more than half of the Cardinal points with 20 and 16, respectively.

Mount St. Mary's began to apply pressure going into the final period, and cut their 12 point third quarter deficit in half at the final gun.

Knicks Win in Last Second of Overtime, 93-91

Redskins, L. A. in 'Title' Game; Browns Play 49ers for Crown

Albert Will Lead San Francisco

Cleveland, Dec. 10 (AP).—The gun shot ending tomorrow's play-off game between the San Francisco 49ers and the Cleveland Browns in chilly Municipal Stadium will put a period to the four-year history of the All-America Football Conference.

And, naturally, the Browns, who have been champions of the junior professional football league since its founding in 1946, want to finish up that way.

The AAC will merge with the older National Football League December 19.

But the Californians, who defeated the champions, 56-28,

—Final Chapter, 'Tennis Is My Racket'—

Riggs Beats Budge, Reaches Top

BY BOBBY RIGGS
Former World's Tennis Champion

SINCE I'd been discharged from the Navy, I'd beaten Budge in several big matches. I'd edged him out, 24—22, on a long exhibition tour, too.

But two matches out of 46 isn't a great margin. Budge still was Budge. If I expected to beat him, before a big crowd, in America's greatest tennis center (Forest Hills, N. Y.), I'd have to put out the finest tennis I'd ever played in my life.

There isn't any quit in Don's character.

It looked like the right time to uncover my "secret weapon"—a Riggs version of the cannonball serve. I was sure that nobody would expect me to line in many service aces. Least of all Budge.

One game behind, I served. I whipped the first ball in as hard as I could hit it. Don looked a little surprised.

RIGGS

And right there, I said to myself, "Don't let him start moving you around again. Shoot for the corners. Put just a little more power into your ground strokes."

Not only did my strategy work like a charm but my strokes were clicking perfectly. I tried a few drop shots, and they worked.

I lobbed, and Don missed. I put up the beat on my forehand drives, and they stayed in. I began to carry the attack to Budge.

THE NEWSPAPERS always are calling me things like "great retriever" and "defensive marvel," but I think I hit the ball pretty hard against Don that day.

I saw plenty of openings as Budge began to give way. And I banged the ball as hard as I could when I saw them.

That first set was mine at 6—3. Budge didn't win a game after I organized myself out there and changed my tactics.

In the second set, he couldn't match my ground strokes at all, and I took it, 6—1. I got the third set, too, 6—1, winding up the whole match in just 56 minutes. It was the

Bill Reckert Excels for Georgetown

BILL RECKERT, 21-year-old senior, always has made higher marks than the average Georgetown student.

Now it appears that he's going to leave school with a sports letter. That's another feat most of the boys won't accomplish.

This boy Reckert isn't just average. He's been totally blind since the age of 7.

Bill's a Washington boy, 3130 Dumbarton ave., nw., and wrestling's his forte. He was captain of his Maryland School for the Blind team. But wrestling's one sport Georgetown didn't have until recently.

Three years ago, Dave Hodge, now a law student, and Seniors Frank Casey and Jim Flynn got busy. They sold the school on the idea of letting them get up a team. Its beginning was humble enough. Both matches were with Gallaudet and Georgetown lost both.

THEN last year, the boys won three of five and came close to sweeping them all.

This season Casey and Flynn, wrestlers and coaches, look forward to a successful year. And they say they're counting on Reckert to do them a lot of good in the 128-pound class. He and the rest of the Hoyas open their season against Gallaudet January 20.

They first approached Reckert last year, but he was too busy with classwork. You can get a little busy when you have to take your notes in Braille and need a reader to go over your lessons aloud.

Nonetheless, Reckert, Georgetown's only blind pupil, is a B-plus student. He's working for a bachelor of social science degree and majoring in history.

Bill says, "The only thing a blind wrestler asks is that the crowd remain silent when both wrestlers are on their feet. That's so we can know where our opponents are. Once we're on the mat, people can make all the noise they wish."

Hard-working Bill added, "I tune pianos in my spare time. Maybe you could mention that. It might help business."

Filly Scores 1st Win for New Owner

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, Dec. 10.—Flicka Foot, added to the stable of Samuel H. Rogers of Washington during the Bowie meeting, made good at the first asking for her new owner today.

Victory for the fleet daughter of Boss Hoss and Toy Foot came in the Harpers Ferry purse, featuring a busy day at the races which drew an estimated 7500 crowd.

With Johnny Tammaro, veteran of the saddle wars, aboard, Flicka Foot reached the wire a length and a half in front of H. W. Wagley's Right Metal. R. B. Archer's Cape Cod, jr., installed the favorite, had a tough time getting as close as third, gaining the position via the camera.

Flicka Foot returned a $9.40 mutuel and was clocked in 1:23 2/5 for the 6½ furlongs over a fast track. The victory was the tenth of the year in 29 tries for the filly and sent her earnings well over the $10,000 mark.

Tammaro gave Flicka Foot a swell ride. He rated her close to the pacemakers, took command approaching the far turn and then held everything safe from that point to the wire.

Right Metal came from last position to be a determined-closing 3-year-old at the end. Cape Cod, Jr., drifted back going to the turn, was taken to the outside by Buddy Root but hung in the final drive.

Root, however, had better racing luck in the fifth race, the day's secondary feature. He handled the Archer Stable's Navy Ace and brought the Case Ace gelding home with daylight to spare over Mrs. J. M. Lingles Cinder Foot with Mrs. F. D. Christmas' Slammuring third. Navy Ace, beaten here on the Friday's program, paid $17.20 today.

Starting with the second race Willie Downs, Baltimore boy, rode three straight winners, scoring with Royal Roberts' Need Luck, paying $5.80, Downs completed a $51.20 daily double.

In the third he won with W. C. Bell's High Cantle at $4.40 and then came back in the fourth to get W. G. Christmas' Idle Mr. home at $5.40.

AT CHARLES TOWN

DEAR FOLKS:

At least two of the five racing periods here will be unopposed next year. They are the 18-days from March 4 to March 24 and a similar period December 4 to December 23. Some race people are shaking their heads about the March dates. However, President Al. J. Boyle maintains there's as much chance of good weather in March as in December. Charles Town has shown the way as far as winter racing is concerned. The plant here was built for it, the fans like it and years of experience have served to give officials the know-how of keeping the track surface raceable. Yes, Charles Town expects it's big meetings in March and December, using the remainder of the days to coast along and keep horsemen and horses in eating money. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Season's Here

Get Ready For Ducks at Next Freeze

By Ralph Murdock

DUCK HUNTING in this area is just about due for a new high. Blackheads, one of the best decoys of all waterfowl, have arrived. A good flight of canvasbacks is expected when the first freeze hits the Susquehanna flats. Two consecutive days with a thermometer registering around 20 degrees will do the trick.

Murdock

A record 2629 ducks and geese were banded in Alaska last summer by the United States Fish and Wildlife Service. An additional 100,000 waterfowl were banded in Canada and the northern part of the United States. Any hunter killing a banded bird can help the cause of conservation by sending the band number, together with information on when, where and how the bird was taken, to the Bird Banding Office, Patuxent Research Refuge, Laurel, Md.

THE FOLLOWING are the regulations governing the Catoctin Recreational Demonstration Area located near Thurmont, Md., in Frederick County:

"The Catoctin Area is sanctuary for wildlife of every sort, and all hunting, or the killing, wounding, frightening, disturbing or capturing of any bird, animal, or other wildlife, is prohibited.

"Firearms, explosives, air guns, traps, seines, or nets are prohibited within the area."

Under the regulations, anyone apprehended for violating the above regulations can be fined up to $500 or imprisoned for a period not to exceed six months, or both.

So says G. B. Williams, custodian.

LEWIS LEVIN of 3191 Westover rd. se., while fishing off Stuart, Fla., received a certificate for having caught a sailfish measuring 6 feet 4 inches on the cruiser Jean Dare. Capt. Earl Dare was the skipper. It was Levin's first "sail" and he is having it mounted. Included in the party was his brother, George, and their wives. The annual fishing contest of the Stuart Sailfish Club opened on November 1.

Killing of a vicious deer in the Loudenville section of Marshall County, W. Va., was reported this week by the conservation commission. The animal was shot by Conservation Officer Lester E. Miller after the deer had attacked several women and children. In one case, said Miller, it broke down a door to get into a house. The deer, a spike buck, had been raised by hand by John Murphy of Pleasant Valley.

Here's a new wrinkle. A gray squirrel with five feet was killed by Max Bouillet near Farmington, W. Va. The extra foot was on the neck in front of the two front legs. Bouillet took the rare specimen to a taxidermist to be mounted.

One night recently, Henry Roberts, a farmer who lives near Faver, Va., heard a commotion in his barnyard. Thinking it was a farm animal making the noises, Henry didn't go outside the house to take a look. A second commotion prompted him to carry his 12-gauge shotgun out to investigate.

There, to his surprise and anger was a black bear devouring one of his pigs. Nearby was another dead animal and a badly crippled one. Roberts fired at almost point-blank range and the bear fell dead. Although bruin was an old one, he only weighed 225 pounds.

Little Scott Wins For Little Rock in Little Rose Bowl

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 10 (AP).—Little Rock Junior College today ended the West's domination of the Little Rose Bowl series today by handing California's Santa Ana Junior College a 25 to 19 defeat in the fourth edition of the post-season intersectional encounter.

A crowd of 33,942 saw Little Rock put together an 80-yard drive for the touchdown that broke a 19-19 deadlock with only three minutes left in the game.

The big thrill of the day was a punt return by Benny (Little Smackover) Scott, Little Rock's 127-pound safety man and brother of pro football's Clyde (Big Smackover) Scott. Benny fielded a punt on his own 25 and, like a trapped rabbit, scampered back to his 15, reversed himself three times, and finally cut loose with a run that was good for 85 yards and a touchdown that sent his mates into the fore, 19-12

Southern Will Soon Name 'Czar'

Roanoke, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—The Southern Conference may hold a secial meeting within the next two or three weeks to name a league commissioner.

Some of the loop's officers and members expressed the opinion today before the close of the conference's annual get-together that a commissioner was needed before the "purity code" showdown with the National Collegiate Athletic Association in New York, January 13 and 14.

"I think we should appoint this commissioner," said one conference official, "before we go to New York. I think it might help in our efforts to get what we want."

What the Southern Conference wants is relaxation of the NCAA "purity code" to permit a year-round training table on the home campus League officials feel that if such a proposal is approved, three schools in the Southern Conference area—Virginia Tech, the Citadel and the University of Virginia—will automatically find themselves out of the NCAA dog house and in line with the "purity code." The three schools are among seven facing expulsion and a schedule boycott because of code violations.

G. F. Eppley, conference president from the University of Maryland, said after today's adjournment that he didn't know—yet—when or where the meeting to name a commissioner would be held. The conference executive committee is to appoint a special committee to make nominations.

Max Farrington, conference vice president and athletic director at George Washington, will represent the circuit at the Olympic meeting in Washington, January 7 and 8.

All-Stars Beat Pros, 21 to 6

Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 10 (AP).—The College All Stars, eclipsed by Charlotte's Clippers in the first half, shone brightly in the last two periods today to trounce the professionals, 21-6.

Tom Fetzer, Wake Forest freshman coach, staged a brilliant personal comeback after the intermission, scoring two touchdowns and passing for the third to lead the collegians to their second victory in the three-year-old series. Oddly enough, in each of the three games, the stars have scored 21 points. They won, 21-13, in 1947 and lost, 30-21, a year ago.

Whatever it was that Wake Forest's Peahead Walker and South Carolina's Rex Enright, all-star coaches, told their squad at the half, it worked. The boys took their cue from Notre Dame All-America Leon Hart, who watched the game from their bench, unable to play as originally planned due to a restraining order by the NCAA. At halftime, Hart told the 5,000 chilled spectators that he thought the boys would do better in the last two periods. They did.

The scoring:

All-Stars	0	0	14	7	—21
Clippers	6	0	0	0	— 6

AllStars scoring—Touchdowns, Fetzer (2), Duncan. Points after touchdown, Asher (3).
Clippers scoring—Touchdown, Blomquist.

Arkansas Censured For Rough Play

Dallas, Dec. 10 (AP).—The University of Arkansas was censured for too rough play against Texas Christian in football and a gag rule was invoked against the coaches to prevent blasts in the press at the officiating.

Arkansas was found guilty of charges brought by Coach Dutch Meyer of Texas Christian, who alleged dirty play in last fall's game at Fayetteville, and the conference fathers warned that a repetition would bring more drastic action than a "censure."

Highs Experiment

Refs Use Mike Instead Of Whistle

Eastern High Principal John Paul Collins believes that the quality of basketball refereeing has deterioated, and he's going to do something about it.

When Eastern plays its alumni in an exhibition game the night of January 26, he'll experiment with a new system, using three officials.

Dave Keppel, former Eastern coach and veteran official, will serve as a stationary referee-in-chief on an elevated platform just outside the sideline at midcourt. He'll be assisted by two referees, who'll keep up with the plays on the floor.

Kepell, armed with a microphone, will make all decisions on the fouls, out of bounds and other rules infractions and will keep the audience up to date.

His two assistants will not call any fouls, but will handle the ball whenever Keppel calls an infraction.

Collins patterned the plan after the one used by officials of tennis matches. He says it should make for more uniform officiating and make the game more interesting to the spectator.

Twice the lead changed hands as the two battled a 22-mile east wind.

Hamilton, who led the field yesterday with 128—or 11 under regulation—was 12 under when he birdied the par 5 fifth hole, but a three putt on the par 3 eighth gave him par for the nine.

Haas, who yesterday fired a hole in one, birdied the second fifth and sixth holes on the back side.

At the end of nine holes the Haas-Hamilton duel was a standoff with a 164 for 45 holes.

Young Haas took a short-lived lead when he birdied the par five thirteenth, but Hamilton dropped a four-footer on the par, sixteenth to pull even for the match.

Two strokes behind the leaders at 201 were Sammy Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., and Tommy Bolt, Houston, Texas. Snead, leading money winner of 1949, carded 34-33—67 and Bolt fired 35-35—70, par for the 6310-yard course.

Pete Cooper, Ponte Vedra, Fla., was alone for seventh at 206.

Bunched at 207 were Lew Worsham, Pittsburgh; Dave Douglas, Newark, Del., and Errie Ball, Oak Park, Ill.

Skee Reigel of Tulsa, Okla., was the low scoring amateur with 135-70—208. Also at 208 were pros Herman Keiser, St. Andrews, Ill., and Glen Teal, Memphis, Tenn.

The final 81-hole round will be played tomorrow.

Prize Boners Put Out Ghezzi, Cary Middlecoff

Miami, Fla., Dec. 10 (UP).—A caddy's mistake and a cardinal rule of golf knocked two big-name professionals from the third round of the Miami Open today.

United States Open Champion Cary Middlecoff's caddy made the mistake and the Memphis pro withdrew from the tournament. Tourney veteran Vic Ghezzi of Deal, N. J., forgot the rules and was disqualified.

Middlecoff was scored incorrectly on the twelfth hole because his caddy mistakenly thought his drive was out of bounds and picked up the ball.

Middlecoff played a provisional drive but the tournament committee ruled the ball in the caddy's pocket was an "unplayable lie," costing him two strokes. To avoid any possible protests if he landed in the money, Middlecoff withdrew from the tournament.

Absentmindedness apparently hit Ghezzi on the sixth hole.

He started practicing punts on the green before he holed out. The tournament committee disqualified him and Ghezzi apologized.

"I just forgot," he explained.

Seven-Up Wins Trinidad Club 'Bowl' Game

By Bill Gilbert

Seven-Up defeated Trinidad, 19-0, last night at George Washington High Stadium in Alexandria in the Trinidad Benefit Bowl.

The two 140-pound teams battled to a scoreless deadlock for one half but on the first play of the second half Allen Wilhelm intercepted a pass from Trinidad's Tom Foley and returned it 60 yards for a touchdown.

Buddy King picked up a loose ball fumbled by teammate Bill Bradford and raced 35 yeards for the second Seven-Up score.

The final score came with less than two minutes remaining in the game as Gene Hill passed five yards to Puggy Hill for the tally to climax a 53-yard drive.

In a preliminary 90-pound game Del-Ray defeated Trinidad, 20-13.

Baylor Sports Chief Quits

Waco, Tex., Dec. 10 (AP).—Ralph Wolf resigned today as Baylor University athletic director—only a day after Bob Woodruff resigned as head football coach.

It climaxed three days of turmoil at the Baptist school during which the athletic committee held a meeting to define "more clearly the duties" of Woodruff and Wolf and ended up by continuing Wolf as athletic director but with the designation of stadium director when he accepted that job.

Wolf severed more than a quarter-century connection with Baylor by announcing he was quitting, effective next June 1, "to clear the atmosphere for Dr. White and the board of trustees to reorganize the athletic department."

Pittsburgh, Dec. 10 (AP).—Somewhere between Munhall and Jeanette buses carrying the basketball teams of the two small Pennsylvania towns' high schools passed each other last night.

On Munhall's schedule, the game was scheduled to be played at Jeanette. The Jeanette card listed the contest at Munhall.

Redskins Play Rams

Cardinal victory over the Bears in Chicago, the Rams take the title no matter what they do tomorrow.

If the Bears win over the Cards, Los Angeles must beat or deadlock the Redskins to nose out the Bears for the Western championship.

More than 50,000 fans are expected to turn out to see the Rams, 14-point favorites, take their last shot at a league playoff date with the Philadelphia Eagles next Sunday.

Once again it will be a match of the passing artistry of Washington's Sammy Baugh and the Rams' Bob Waterfield. The two stellar veterans last tangled in an exhibition game here in August, the Redskins and Baugh winning with a thrilling finish, 34-28.

The Redskins dropped behind, 21-7, in that one. But they came back on a 94-yard kickoff return by Dan Sandifer, the same speedster's 11-yard dash off guard, a 76-yard march featured by Rob Goode, and finally on Howie Livingston's pass interception and 34-yard touchdown run with eight minutes left.

Earlier Baugh had got off one touchdown pass and Waterfield two in a game witnessed by 64,000 Californians.

'Schools Immune From Liability'

Board Considering Insurance For High School Athletes

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

The Board of Education is considering taking out insurance on high-school athletes.

The board, which for years shied away from supplying accident insurance protection for its athletes, yesterday was told that it needn't be afraid to stick its neck out.

"The mere participation in an insurance plan does not . . . create legal liability for injuries to students," Vernon West, District of Columbia corporation counsel told the board yesterday.

Superintendent of Schools Hobart N. Corning explained, "The schools are immune from liability in cases of accident to students, and we were wondering if we would be jeopardizing that immunity by participating in an insurance plan."

Albert E. Steinem, head of the Board of Education's athletic committee, however, said last night, "We are considering several plans to provide insurance protection for the athletes. I understand that schools are doing that elsewhere.

"We may get the money out of gate receipts, if we can play night football next year and raise the intake at the gate," said Steinem, "or we might set aside certain games, like the Interhigh championship game, to supply the funds for insurance. We're investigating."

Under present conditions, each public high athlete must take out his own accident insurance policy if he wants the protection, but he isn't required to take out insurance. In 1948, the McKinley Tech Alumni Circle T Club furnished the money to insure the Tech football players, but that donation was not repeated this year.

In 1946 the high school principals considered a plan to subsidize an insurance program for the athletes. But they dropped the idea when the question was raised over whether or not they'd be liable to suit in case of injury to a player.

In Virginia all public high school varsity athletes are provided with accident insurance protection. George Washington High of Alexandria takes between $150 and $200 out of its gate receipts to insure its athletes every year.

It costs G. W. $3 to insure each of its athletes for a full year.

Police Boys Club No. 4 Wins Title On 'Penetration'

Club No. 4, in the 140-pound division of the Metropolitan Police Boys' football league won the second half title by beating Club No. 5, 18 to 11, yesterday at Fairlawn Field in Anacostia.

Police Boys Clubs officials were forced to use the "penetration system," when, at the end of the contest, both teams were tied 7-7.

Program Supervisor Harry Childs explained that in the "penetration system," the team that controls the ball on or over its opponents '30-yard line receives 3 points; on or over the 20-yard line 5 points, and on or over the 10-yard line 10 points.

Actual touchdowns were made by Walt Bowman for Club No. 4, while Art Mulvey scored for Club No. 5.

The playoff for league supremacy will be held next Saturday at Fairlawn at 2 p. m., when No. 4 meets No. 10, winner of the first half.

Orsario Ready For Cooper

Jimmy Cooper, local featherweight king, who owns a decision over Bantamweight Champ Manuel Ortiz, will be battling to reverse a previous loss when he meets Filberto Osario tomorrow night at Turner's Arena.

Osario, hard-punching Puerto Rican, pulled an upset in November, 1948, when he was called on to fill in for Leo LeBrun against Cooper and administered a sound trouncing to the local lad.

At that time Osario was in poor condition, having fought only three rounds in several months. Now, he is in top shape and threatens to do an even more thorough job of licking Cooper.

Gene Smith, National Golden Gloves flyweight champ, makes his pro debut, in a five-rounder against Joe Camarata of Baltimore.

the 2, and Johnny Merricks went over on his second try.

Quantico's band had a couple of encores on that "California, Here We Come." It enjoyed the one most on the last touchdown.

That's when Center Bille Jesse, another former Navy ace, lumbered 90 yards for a score with an intercepted pass. Jesse, notoriously slow, grabbed an errant Minihan pass on his 10, and headed goalward.

Before Jesse's feat, End Bob McElroy intercepted a toss by Minihan on the Lejeune 45, and raced 26 yards to set up Bob Maiden's eventual plunge from the 1-yard line.

And, before that, Minihan made a pass good to Lou Darnell for a 57-yard scoring play. Lejeune had to rely on young Minihan's right arm. It made exactly 7 yards through the Quantico line.

Georgie Greco, pile-driving 150-pounder, seemed to account for most of Quantico's 126 yards on the ground.

The loss was only the second for Lejeune in 13 starts. Quantico now boasts a 10-3 record, two of the losses were suffered in college competition.

St. Joseph's Johnny Hart Named Top CYO Player

By Jules Loh

St. Joseph's Home's Johnny Hart was selected the outstanding player in the CYO as the organization picked its 15-man all-star squad last night.

City champions Blessed Sacrament and runnerup St. Anthony's each posted three men on the team which represented 11 out of the 16 parochial schools in the league.

HART

Hart nosed out Blessed Sacrament's Jimmy Hayden by one vote in last night's balloting between six players made eligible for the award by a previous vote.

The only repeater on the team, Hart captained the orphanage to second place in section two competition.

A knee injury sidelined the triple-threat back for the sectional title game with St. Anthony's, which Joseph's Home lost, 13-0.

Hart was practically the whole St. Joe's team. He ran the ball three out of four times and did all the kicking and passing. He shone on defense as either a line backer or tackle.

The entire all-star squad is as follows: Jack McCaleb, Blessed Sacrament; Jimmy Hayden, Blessed Sacrament; Archie Kennedy, Blessed Sacrament; Bernie Divvers, St. Anthony's; Jerry McAleer, St. Anthony's; Johnny Renehan, St. Anthony's; Johnny Rachel, St. Francis Xavier; Phil Mudd, Nativity; Johnny Hart, St. Joseph's Home; Allie Burch, St. Teresa's; Mike Zettler, St. Michael's; George Gardiner, St. Jerome's; Danny Barbano, Holy Comforter; Paul Cocchero, St. Francis de Sales; Vernon Hill, St. Peter's.

Leahy's Aces At Grid Dinner

Notre Dame Coach Frank Leahy and two of his All-Americans, Leon Hart and Emil Sitko, will be honored at the Washington Touchdown Club's fifteenth annual dinner at the Hotel Statler, January 7.

Leahy, the most successful Irish coach since Knute Rockne, has been selected the Nation's leading college coach and will receive the Lieut. Bob Smith Memorial Trophy.

Hart, 248-pound end, was voted the outstanding lineman in the Nation and will be presented with the Knute Rockne Memorial Trophy. His teammate, Fullback Sitko, was selected as the nation's top back and will get the Walter Camp Memorial Trophy.

Other awards to outstanding players in the area will be announced soon.

The club's weekly luncheon series will end Monday when John T. Koehler, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Al Houghton, president of the Mid-Atlantic Professional Golfers Association, address the group at 12:30 o'clock.

earlier this season, think it would be nice if the conference history would list two champions. And Coach Buck Shaw's huskies are just the sort of fellows to put up a struggle.

Their gameness was evident in the last game between the two teams. The Clevelanders managed to edge San Francisco, 30-28, with a field goal providing the victory margin.

The one real bright spot in the 49ers' picture is that Frankie Albert will be in there tossing passes. Frankie bruised his ankle last week against the New York Yankees. But Shaw allowed Albert to take his first workout yesterday and he said he could play.

The San Francisco team's star signal-caller will be up against tough opposition. Otto Graham, Cleveland quarterback, is the league leader in passing. And Coach Paul Brown intends Graham to keep his throwing arm busy today.

He'll receive $1500 —in advance—for playing in the Seniors Bowl game in Jacksonville January 7 . . . Big Trades In Air as Majors' Meeting Opens in New York

Radio, Video Also Up For Study

New York, Dec. 10 (U.P.). — Big deals for big leaguers was the theme tonight as club owners moved in for their annual mid-winter meeting at which they also will make some significant changes in the playing rules.

Stymied because no one was willing to "give up a row boat for a battleship" in the week-long minor league sessions in Baltimore, the club owners are likely to get together here on a more realistic footing.

Both the American and National Leagues will meet separately Monday and Tuesday. If business warrants, they'll get together Wednesday for a joint session under Commissioner A. B. Chandler.

No startling business is expected because the minors turned down an amendment to the major-minor code that would have repealed the bonus rule.

It is doubtful if the bonus rule will be discussed formally at the meetings but it still is the subject of heated conversation whenever baseball men gather.

Radio and television policies probably will consume more time than any other proposal, particularly in the National League. The American League has had a radio bureau for several years, but the National has none.

Under the new agreement, approved by the minors, each club is permitted to authorize broadcasts or telecasts of its games in any other city in the country, unless there is a club playing a home game in the city at the time.

As it looks now, the clubs most likely to do business with each other were the New York Giants and Pittsburgh Pirates, the New York Yankees and Washington Senators, possibly the Detroit Tigers joining the Yanks and Senators in a three-cornered deal, the St. Louis Browns and Cleveland Indians and the Cincinnati Reds and Brooklyn Dodgers.

The Yankees have some very good reserve men from what Manager Casey Stengel calls "the best bench in baseball" and have been trying to interest both the Senators and Tigers in Outfielder Johnny Lindell, Second Baseman Billy Johnson, and one of their host of fair catchers, probably Ralph Houk or Connie Niarhos.

In turn, the Yankees want Ray Scarborough of Washington —as who doesn't.

The Giants, who may have given up trying to pry shortstop Alvin Dark from the Braves, now are concentrating on a deal with the Pirates in which Shortstop Buddy Kerr would go to Pittsburgh for Shortstop Stan Rojek.

Metro Title At Stake

Langdon Lions will be shooting for the Metropolitan Amateur Football League's 160-pound title today when they take on the Western Division champion Southwest Merchants at Gonzaga Field. The opening kickoff is scheduled for 2 p. m.

The Lions have played together since they competed as 60-pounders. They swept their first seven league games this season while clinching Eastern laurels before dropping No. 8 to Brookland Merchants, 22-0.

Southwest, on the other hand, lost two of its first three games and tied No. 4 before rallying to tie Riverside Rollers for Western honors. In a playoff, Southwest defeated Riverside, 13-7, to take the sectional championship. The Merchantmen have an over-all record of five wins, two ties and two losses.

The Lions will feature three sets of brothers: Bob and Bill Burlingame, backs; Clyde and Bob Long, quarterback and guard; and Phil and Johnny Caruso, also backs.

Southwest will alternate three triple-threat backs in Eddie Tawney, Charlie Newman and Jerry Osborne.

Tawney sparked Southwest to the Metro League's 160-pound title back in 1947. He suffered a fractured back early in 1948 and was sidelined for the season. But he has staged a fine comeback this season and last Sunday he scored both of his team's touchdowns against Riverside.

The Lions defeated Southwest in the opening game, 6-0, but expect a rousing battle today from the determined Merchantmen.

Riggs Beats Budge, Wins Pro Crown

worst beating Budge ever took in a major match.

KAY, MY WIFE, was so set on seeing me win that she went so far as to make up her mind before the match that she'd give up cokes for a year if I managed to come through.

Kay had taken full charge of my training, and she saw to it that I didn't cheat. She fed me beefsteak three times a day—even for breakfast—and watched the rest of my diet like a hawk.

Kay made me take vitamin tablets, too. The day of the big match at Forest Hills, Johnny Faunce, a California tennis pro, saw Kay feed me three of the tablets. For a gag, he told Don's wife, Deirdre, about it. Deirdre wanted to be sure Don didn't miss anything, so she made him take four vitamin pills!

After the singles final was over, I teamed with Welby Van Horn to play Fred Perry and Frankie Kovacs in the final of the doubles championships. We lost, 1—6, 6—3, 7—5, 6—4.

I earned $2300 for winning the singles event, and $800 for being a member of the runner-up doubles team. That made a total of $3100 for my week's work. No wonder I felt pretty good when Kay and I walked down the street, after the newsreel photographers finished with us, to our room at the Forest Hills Inn.

For the first time in my career, I was recognized as the best tennis player in the game. It was never like that when I was the amateur champion.

Winning the pro championship made me feel I could finally say to the big shots of the amateur game, "Whether you like it or not, I'm the best. You haven't got anybody who can beat me."

They never had thought I was that good and they never bothered to hide it. Now I didn't care what they thought.

I was the champion of the world.

Coach Hopes to 'Break Even'

Western Banks on Karas, Weintraub in Interhigh Race

Coach Cliff (Dinty) Moore, whose Western Red Raiders finished in sixth place in the Interhigh Basketball League last year, doesn't expect to do too much better this year. "I just hope we break even," Dinty comments.

The Red Raiders will have only three returning lettermen from last year's squad. Of those three, one, Lou Snouffer, is out for a couple of weeks after undergoing an appendectomy a month ago.

Junior varsity boys and those up from the third string varsity will supply the bulk of the Red Raiders attack. Jay Howard, five-foot, ten-inch forward, figures prominently in Moore's plans. Jay connected for six points in Western's 36-34 win over Bethesda-Chevy Chase in its opener Friday. The Red Raiders may have found a good clutch player in Marvin Rosenblatt. Marv put in the two decisive points against the Barons with a layup in the last 15 seconds of the game.

Stan Karas, a corner set-shot artist who scored 13 points against B-CC, and Harold Weintraub, captain and center of the team, are the two returning lettermen whom Moore will count on for experienced performances.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Prospect Better for Labor Peace

On the surface, the labor outlook is bad. John L. Lewis is still fussing and feuding with the owners of the country's coal mines. In October, some 600,000 workers went on strike to enforce wage demands—the highest number for any month since April, 1947. In spite of that, the prospect for 1950 is for (1) comparative peace and quiet and (2) stability in wage rates.

Livingston

Here's the reason: Some day, and probably soon, John L. Lewis will come to terms with the coal producers. He's been negotiating for a contract "on and off" for five months. Even he must be tired. His pension and welfare fund is in financial jeopardy because royalties aren't being paid.

The mine owners aren't happy either—not on a three-day week—and would probably like to settle. Lewis boasts about the few small coal mines that have met his terms. But his real strength is the high cost of part-time coal production. The heavy investment of the large coal companies in mechanical equipment demands a full work week. Each day the machinery is idle the companies get no return on their money. More, they're out of pocket, for they have to maintain the mines.

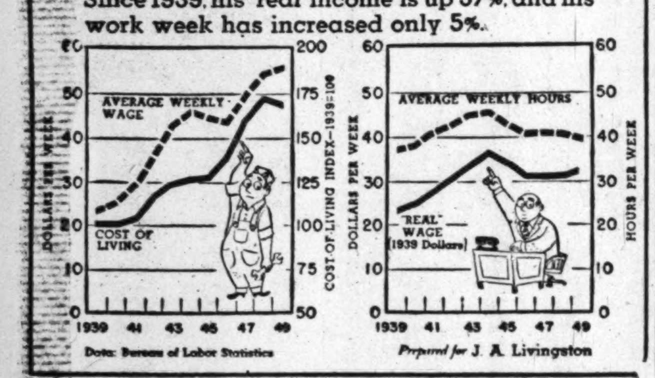
Both Under Pressure

Thus, Lewis' three-day week is calculated to keep the country from industrial starvation due to lack of coal, yet it deprives the coal companies of customary profits. But both sides are under pressure to settle—and soon.

If an agreement is made, it will surely run for a year. And that would mean that the nation's two basic industries—coal and steel—will have settled on wages and pensions through most of next year. The Bethlehem Steel contract runs through 1951, but has a reopening clause on wages on November 1, 1950. Ditto United States Steel.

HOW THE WORKER FARES

Since 1939, his "real" income is up 37%, and his work week has increased only 5%.



A pattern has already been indicated in automobiles for 1950. The Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers have established a pension program, similar to that in the steel industry. General Motors is studying a plan. So, it's possible that when the G. M. contract is reopened in the spring negotiations will be smooth and amicable. One possible hitch: The UAW wants a union shop, which it already has at Ford. G. M. might balk at that.

Wage Rates and C. of L.

In the electrical industry, anything can happen—because of the fight between the CIO-sponsored International Union of Electrical Workers and the left-wing United Electrical Workers, recently ousted from the CIO.

Even so, as things shape up now—unless Lewis is prepared to drag on without a contract indefinitely and to call intermittent, harassing strikes which invite drastic Taft-Hartley treatment—the prospect for labor peace in the New Year is better than in any December since the end of the war. Principal reason: The cost of living has stopped rising rapidly.

Indeed, 1949 will go down as the year in which the postwar wage trend flattened out. Average weekly earnings of workers in manufacturing plants rose a bit, from about $54 in 1948 to $55. But the increase was largely the result of wage boosts negotiated last year, not this year.

Average hourly earnings are a cent below what they were at the start of the year—$1.39 an hour versus $1.40. This is because overtime has been reduced, not because of lower wage scales. The following table shows the postwar changes in hourly wages since the end of the war:

	Jan.	Dec.	% Rise
1946	$1.00	$1.16	16%
1947	1.17	1.30	11
1948	1.30	1.40	8
1949	1.40	1.39*	Nil

*October.

Hourly wages are not a true measure of prospective labor costs. Recently won pensions add to payroll costs. Furthermore, the Social Security wage tax goes up from 1% to 1½% in 1950.

No General Inflation

The higher wage bill puts pressure on wholesale prices. Iron Age reports that a price advance in steel is unavoidable because of higher transportation, labor, and raw material costs. Sharon Steel recently advanced some prices.

But steel is still in short supply. Not so machinery, autos, refrigerators, clothing. Or agricultural products—as the holdings of the Commodity Credit Corp. indicate. So prices can't be lifted willy-nilly every time costs go up.

That, in and of itself, should make for easier labor-management relations. If rank-and-file workers are not constantly confronted with jumping living costs, they won't be giving their labor leaders the needle to get them higher wages. In fact, in 1950, most of the exhorting may come from the top—the labor leaders. In 1948 and 1949, the pressure was the other way.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Cotton futures today closed 5 to 25 cents a bale lower. Trading was active.

Deferred contracts encountered selling on the uncertainty of the status of pending new-crop restrictions.

Farmers next will vote on marketing referendum, and two thirds of the farmers will have to agree to quota restrictions before they can be imposed. Acreage allotments will go into effect next year whether the marketing quotas are voted upon or not. The farmers want to participate in the loan program. There was, however, a feeling in the trade that there might be an increase in acreages to producers who are claiming hardship reductions.

D. C. Nonchain Sales Drop 6% For October

By S. Oliver Goodman

Washington independent retailers experienced a 6 percent sales drop in October, according to a Census Bureau recapitulation. This cut the 10-month gain here to only 1 per cent over the same 1948 period.

The so-called "soft goods" field was the hardest hit in October. Sales slumps ranged to 23 percent in women's apparel, family clothing, men's apparel and shoes.

Such hard goods lines as auto sales, motor accessories and furniture showed substantial increases.

Sharpest decline was in the photo-camera field, where October sales were 28 per cent less than in the corresponding 1948 month. Unseasonable weather in October was reflected in the 24 percent sales slump for fuel dealers.

Individual local trades fared as follows for October and the first 10 months, compared with like 1948 periods:

Stocks Remain Steady on Heavy Volume

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—The stock market sailed through choppy trading waters this week but stayed on a straight and narrow path.

Yearend tax selling plus profit taking exerted steady downward pressure. Enough speculative and investment buying appeared though, to keep the market on a stable course.

Tax selling, according to Wall Street sources, has not yet reached its full force.

The market on average ended the week exactly where it started. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks closed Saturday at 69.5, the same figure at the close on December 3.

WHAT STOCKS DID	Sat.	Fri.
Advances	340	397
Declines	237	439
Unchanged	274	285
Total issues	851	1111

The heaviest trading volume of any week this year failed to budge the price level.

Saturday's market was dominated by two issues, Benguet Consolidated Mining and Admiral Corp.

Benguet, a Philippine gold producer, dropped to its 1949 low at one time with a loss of ¼ at 1⅝ and closed ⅛ lower at 1¾. The decline in the stock, which was the most actively traded issue, was linked with news from Manilla that the Philippine government had ordered a strict and immediate control of foreign exchange.

WHO ELSE WANTS TO GET PROMOTED?

A Message from The Wall Street Journal to Men Making $7000 to $15,000

A recent survey reveals that a large number of Wall Street Journal subscribers were promoted to positions of greater responsibility during the last 12 months.

Many of our readers were made vice presidents, some were made sales managers, some were made general managers, and some became presidents of their companies (Representative names of these men sent on request).

We don't claim credit for the success of our readers, but we do feel that the business knowledge they absorb daily from the pages of The Wall Street Journal helps to fit them for greater responsibility.

There is no man making $7000 a year who is not capable of making $10,000. There is no man making $15,000 who is not capable of making $20,000.

One reason why some men make substantial incomes is because they base their decisions on accurate, up-to-the-minute information. There is an old saying that "Knowledge is Power" and nowhere is this truth better illustrated than in the incomes men make.

Said a recent subscriber to The Wall Street Journal, "For the first time in my life, I began to understand why some men can make decisions and others cannot—why some men get ahead while others mark time. The reports from The Wall Street Journal come to me DAILY. I get the fastest possible warning of any trend affecting my business or my personal income. I get the facts in time to protect my interests or to win advancement."

This story is typical. Subscribers to The Wall Street Journal are promptly informed on every major new development relating to: Prices, Taxes, Consumer Buying, Labor, Inventories, Industries, Production Trends, Commodities, Securities, Marketing, World Trade and New Legislation.

The Wall Street Journal is the complete business DAILY. Has largest staff of writers on business and finance. The only business paper served by all four big press associations. It costs $20 a year, but you can get a Trial Subscription for 3 months for $6—77 issues (in U. S. and Possessions). Just tear out this ad and attach check for $6 and mail. Or tell us to bill you. Pennsylvania Oil Boosted 14-15c

Bradford, Pa., Dec. 10 (AP).—Price increases of 14 and 15 cents a barrel on Pennsylvania grade crude oil were made today by the Joseph Seep Purchasing Agency.

The increases are effective Monday. The purchasing agency is an affiliate of South Penn Oil Company and usually sets the price pattern for Pennsylvania grade crude.

George Hanks, president of South Penn Oil, said the increase is the result of a heavy drain on oil stocks since mid-August.

British Exports to U. S. Gained in November

Chatham, England, Dec. 10 (AP). British dollar exports to the United States jumped almost one-third in November compared with October.

A. G. Bottomley, the Labor Government's Secretary for Overseas Trade, said in a speech that sales to the United States in November totaled $20,500,000, against $15,600,000 in October. These are the first two full months since Britain devalued the pound from $4.03 to $2.80.

The move followed a sharp decline in shipments to America during the first half of 1949. In 1948, the monthly average was $22,200,000. In January, February and March this year it dropped to $21,200,000, and in April, May and June plummeted to $13,400,000.

Philadelphia, Reading Coal Omits Dividend

Philadelphia, Dec. 10 (AP).—Directors of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. today deferred dividend payments on common stock because, they said, of unsettled conditions in the anthracite industry.

The company paid 75 cents in January and April, and 50 cents in July and again in October.

The decision to take no action now on payments was widely interpreted to mean the anthracite industry would strongly oppose any move by John L. Lewis to impose higher wage and royalty payments.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—Forecasts for cold weather and blizzard conditions over major sections of the grain belt spurred buying in nearby deliveries of wheat and corn on the Board of Trade today. The advance in wheat was helped along by expectations of export business.

The rest of the market did not match the strength of the two major cereals. Soybeans had fair-sized gains at one time, but toward the close heavy selling came into the December contract. Oats failed to show any strength and December lost ground late in the session.

Wheat closed ⅛ to 1⅜ higher; corn was ¾ to 1¼ higher; oats were ⅜ lower to ⅛ higher; rye was unchanged to ¼ lower; soybeans were ¼ lower to ½ higher and lard was unchanged to 7 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Blizzards were forecast for much of the Western section of the Great Plains area over the weekend.

Santa Turns Sales of TV Into Stampede

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Santa Claus has turned the television rush into a stampede.

Christmas orders added to an already mushrooming demand have manufacturers and dealers frantic trying to explain why you can't get the set of your choice installed by 2:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Many set makers confess they were caught flatfooted by the sudden scramble for sets. Only last summer there were sets all over the place but few buyers. Manufacturers cut prices and most dealers added discounts of their own to attract reluctant customers.

Now all major set makers are running at capacity and some are even falling further behind on their backlogs of orders for most popular models.

New sets are pouring off the assembly lines at close to 100,000 a week, or better than three times the rate of a year ago, according to the Radio Manufacturers Association.

Manufacturers now expect television production to reach 2,500,000 to 2,750,000 for the year, compared with earlier predictions of around two million. Added to those made previously, it will bring the total of sets in use close to the four million mark—probably 3,750,000 at least by yearend.

A spokesman for the Radio Corp. of America says it and other major manufacturers will reach yearend some two to eight weeks behind on deliveries—the delay varying by models. An official of Admiral Corp. says "we're way behind on deliveries," with all models being snapped up as fast as they reach dealers.

The same story is reported by Crosley, Emerson, DuMont, Teletone and others. Zenith this week advised its customers in newspaper advertisements not to pay premiums in order to get quick delivery on its sets—that it was producing allout to catch up on orders.

As welcome as the boom is to set makers, they are a little at a loss for an explanation. Ernest Marx, general manager of DuHont receiver sales, calls it "something very intangible" that "seems to have sprung from a mass psychological source."

14 Protestant Groups To Discuss Unity

Greenwich, Conn., Dec. 10 (AP).—Representatives of 19 million Protestants will meet here Wednesday in a long-sought conference aimed at eventual attainment of a united Protestantism in America.

The conference was called jointly by seven denominations representing 15,140,000 members. These seevn already accept each other's ministries and sacraments. They now will consider closer union.

Seven other denominations, with 4,257,000 members, will send observers.

For years, leading Protestant clergymen have appealed for a working union of the great non-Catholic denominations. Proponents of unity say a united Protestantism could help build churches; consolidate churches where the population has dwindled, and attack such social problems as bad housing, racial strife and juvenile delinquency.

Sending observers are the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Church of the Brethren, the Five Years Meeting of Friends in America (Quaker), Augustana Lutheran, Evangelical United Brethren, Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern) and Churches of God in North America.

Sponsoring the talks are the Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (Northern), the Disciples of Christ, the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Congregational Christian Churches, the Moravian Church in America—Northern Province—and the African Methodist Episcopal Zion.

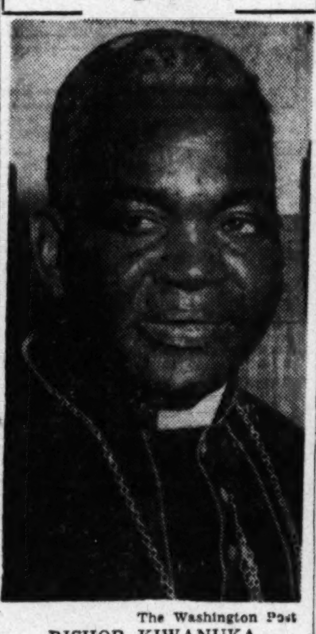
No Strife In Uganda, Bishop Says



The Washington Post

BISHOP KIWANUKA

Visitor from Uganda

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Uganda yesterday described his country as a land of religious peace where there is a pressing need for education.

He is the Most Rev. Joseph Kiuanuka, Bishop and Vicar Apostolic of the Central African British protectorate. The only native Negro bishop in Africa, he is in Washington during his first visit to the United States.

Uganda has not always been blessed with religious peace, he pointed out, as 22 native converts were martyred by being burned at the stake by the native pagan king in 1885, 1886 and 1887.

Martyrs Beatified

The martyrs have been beatified by the Catholic Church, a first step in the process of sanctification. Two of the martyrs were related to the Bishop's family.

There are now about 137,000 Catholics in his diocese, the Bishop said, almost equalling the 140,000 pagans in the country. Besides these, there are some 37,000 Protestants and members of other Christian sect, and about 30,000 Moslems.

There is no strife between the Christians and the pagans, and in fact many of the Catholics have parents who are still pagan and with whom they get along as well as ever, said the genial, 50-year-old Bishop.

Speaks English

Bishop Kiwanuka, who speaks English and French as well as his native Luganda, was interviewed at the rectory of St. Augustine's Church, where he will celebrate a pontifical high mass at 10.30 a. m. today, assisted by the Very Rev. P. McCormick.

The 50-year-old Bishop, who is staying at the White Father's House, 8500 Rockville pike, Bethesda, is touring the country on a mission to obtain funds for construction of a seminary in Uganda.

The seminary will be staffed by native priests, who will train native students for the priesthood. At present, instruction is given by the White Fathers, although all the priests, brothetrs and nuns in Bishop Kiwanuka's diocese are now native Negroes.

While the number of Catholics in Uganda has grown from 102,000 to 137,000 since he became bishop 10 years ago, the priests now are too busy with regular church work to have much time for conversion work, the Bishop said.

He explained that the natives must fulfill four years of instruction, given twice a week, before they are accepted for baptism into the Catholic Church.

Knoxville Jaycees Nominate Hastie For Honor Award

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 10 (AP)—A native Knoxville negro, U. S. Appeals Court Judge William Henry Hastie, of Philadelphia, was nominated today for the annual good government award of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Charles Lockett, president, announced that the Knoxville Junior Chamber had nominated Judge Hastie for his outstanding service as Governor of the Virgin Islands from 1946 to 1949.

The President recently nominated Hastie to the Third Circuit of the U. S. Court of Appeals.

During the war Hastie was dean of the Howard University Law School and a civilian aide to the Secretary of War. He was born in 1904.

Fire Destroys Farm Residence

Hyattstown, Md., Dec. 10 (Spl.)—Fire, apparently caused by a defective chimney, destroyed the farm home of Gilette Lee near here tonight, causing $2500 damage.

The Hyattstown Volunteer Fire Department fought the blaze for more than two hours to prevent it from spreading to nearby buildings. The farm is owned by Robert Windsor, sr., of Ijamsville. No one was in the two-story frame and log house when the fire broke out.

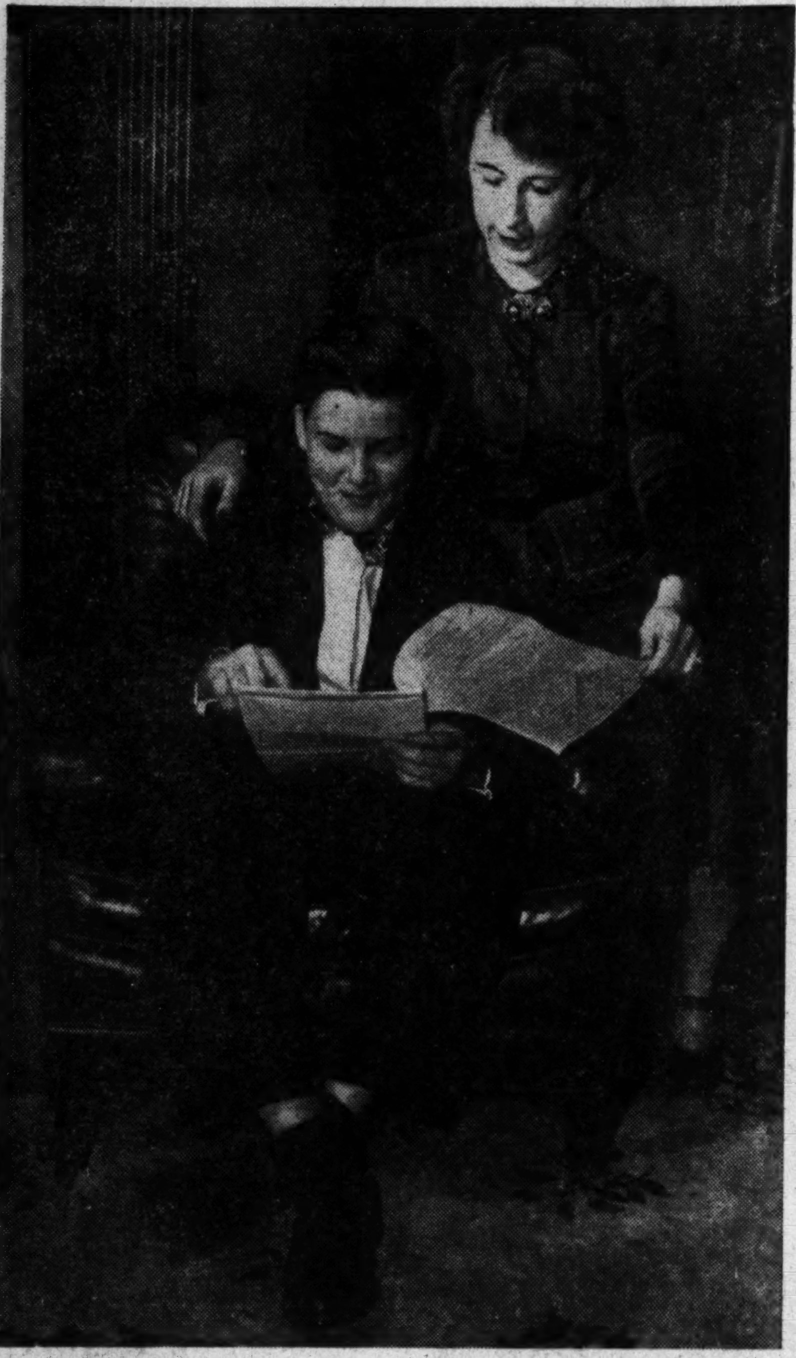
Diplomats, Junior Grade, Spread Good Will



DAVID McGRATH and his mother, Mrs. James Howard McGrath, look over a script for the International Children's Program on which David will appear as representative of the United States. An old hand at ad libbing for television or radio, David isn't bothered by the idea of saying a few words to be heard all over the world via shortwave

Young Video Vets Top Cast For Children's Yule TV Show

By Sonia Stein

WHEN THE ANNUAL International Children's Program goes on the air next Sunday at 4 p. m., there will be at least two video veterans there to give things a semblance of the professional.

David McGrath, the 12-year-old son of Attorney General and Mrs. James Howard McGrath, will be adding just one more appearance on television to his record which already totals seven! (He's lost track of his radio appearances, they are so numerous.)

And Judy Wang, 11-year-old daughter of the Counselor of the Chinese Embassy, will be facing the television cameras for the third time when she appears on the famous Christmas program to say "Kung Chu Sheng Tan Pin Ho Hsin Hsi" to everybody.

TV Talent Important

DAVID, who will represent the United States on the program, got his vast TV experience at the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia last year. Judy has appeared on "Playtime," the Junior League's video show for children.

Television talent is particularly important this year since the show, for the first time in its 15-year history, will be telecast on the entire NBC-TV network as well as on WNBW in Washington. Two years ago it was on a limited TV network, and in other years it has been a purely radio affair. This international program, which consists of holiday greetings from the pigtail and knee-pants division of the diplomatic corps stationed in Washington, will also be on radio this year on a delayed basis. Recordings of the television show will be made Sunday, and played sometime during the week on the NBC radio network, and shortwaved overseas. This way the youngsters appearing on the Board of Trade's annual show will be able to listen to themselves.

Few of the youngsters this year—and there are more than 50 of them—have been on the Christmas show before. But nobody has a moment's concern over the matter.

NBC's Johnny Batchelder, who was master of ceremonies for the last television version of the show and will be in charge of the moppets again this year, says they are wonderful to work with. Scrubbed and polished and dressed up in national costume, they are usually letter perfect in their parts at broadcast time.

Telegenic Mike Fright

HE REMEMBERS a 5-year-old girl who smiled sweetly at him at rehearsal, then looked at the microphone and fled worldessly. But, he recalls, she was completely reliable at air time—that is, she did exactly the same thing as she'd done at rehearsal. It was wonderful television, Batchelder says—"The startled look, the quick flight."

Batchelder was reasonably prepared for it all, anyway. On the little name card he held for each child, containing a few words about the child's hobbies provided by the youngster's mother, this one's hobby was listed as "ingeniously creating new devices to upset all the house."

Most of them have extreme sangfroid and the true calm-in-face-of-disaster of a grown diplomat, claims Batchelder, remembering the 4-year-old tyke in imminent danger of losing his trousers who lost not one syllable of his prepared speech.

They Start Young

THEY start them off young, these junior diplomats. If they are old enough to lisp their way through a greeting in Greek or Hindustani, in Chinese or Danish, they're just the right age.

As in years past, the youngsters will be able to send floral greetings as well as radio ones to someone at home—thousands of miles away—through the Florist Telegraph Delivery Association. The association will also decorate the Continental Room at the Wardman Park Hotel where the program will originate, and the neighboring room where the baby diplomats will hold their own ice cream and cookie diplomatic reception following the telecast. By that time, a little chocolate ice cream on the chin will be smart protocol.

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

YOUNG MOTORIST who plainly intends to go places is Michael Hastie, 4, who pilots a snazzy, lemon-yellow roadster with gleaming chromium trim. British made, if you please! Imported toys have a prominent place in this season's market, are beautifully executed but a little more expensive than the domestic brands

Small Fry Swarm Into Toyland Armed With Lists for Santa

By Peggy Preston

THE LITTLE PEOPLE are abroad on F st., staking their claims in toyland against the day that Santa arrives.

Bundled in their woolen coats and leggings, thousands of tiny figures trudge in and out of the shops daily, feasting their eyes on unbelievable delights.

Toys more wonderful than any they've seen before are displayed for their special pleasure and the diminutive shoppers view them with an optimistic air. Clutched in their respective fists are their lists to Santa Claus, detailed and explicit. Price tags worry them not one whit. Philosophically they reason that the old fellow with the merry mien will handle those little items.

Parents, holding whispered consultations in the background, are almost as spellbound by the joys of 1949's Christmas toys as their wide-eyed offspring. And their pleasure is heightened still more by the fact that prices are down a little this year, while quality and quantity are both on the upgrade.

All this, coupled with a brightened economic picture, may account for the increased shopping activity recorded for the past week. Most of the large shops report that while sales in November were lower than in 1948, December is off to a flying start and gives evidence of becoming a greater shopping month than last year.

In fact, if mother and dad don't step lively they may find stocks depleted of the best type of toys before many days pass. Shelves are already being lightened of their loads of wondrous treasures.

St. Nick and Friends Pleased

MEANWHILE St. Nick and his adult chums are well-pleased with the playthings they have dreamed up for the younger generations. American made toys are miracles of mechanical skill, so advanced that father, just a little resentful, is often heard to mutter, "Christmas was never like this when I was a boy."

Toymakers, listening to the advice of child psychologists, have created hordes of "toys with a purpose." Blocks, construction toys, drawing and painting equipment, and hobby kits are typical, since they are designed to stimulate interest and help a child learn how to entertain himself.

One Connecticut ave. shop carries this idea still further by printing a booklet with lists of gifts arranged according to age groups. Push-and-pull toys are recommended for infants, along with rattles and soft animals. For those of preschool age, 2 to 5, there are listed such things as household toys, "just like grown-ups," rhythm instruments, farm sets, picture puzzles and peg boards.

Children from 6 to 10 years of age may be given archery sets (with rubber tipped arrows), puppets and marionettes, painting and weaving sets, cowboy and Indian equipment, printing sets, play stores and accessories. At the ripe old age of 10, a lad appreciates a complicated array of tracks and an electric train, according to the list. A little girl of the same years can intelligently handle a weaving loom.

Just Like Mother's

FUTURE homemakers of America will find their work cut out for them in many of the season's toys. Busy little hands can imitate mother on laundry day when they dip doll clothes into a miniature electric washer, hang them on a wooden dryer, sprinkle and pack in a clothes basket, then iron them on a petite ironing board with a dainty electric iron.

Dy-dee dolls come equipped with every implement of the trade, including a package of bubble bath; and there is a wonderful life-like doll who carries a record where her tummy should be. With the help of this mechanical gadget, she talks, laughs, cries, gurgles and sobs. She's almost too noisy. Many may feel she is too much of a good thing.

Doll fanciers and children alike will delight in the collection at The Toy Shop which is operated by the Children's Museum of Washington. Here are exquisite little figures, dressed in authentic Ukrainian costumes. The clothes, all beautifully executed, are the handiwork of a group of new Americans who fled the Communistic regime in the Ukraine.

At this shop also are dolls from the pages of children's literature. Cinderella, an upside down doll, is adorable and her accessories include her lost glass slipper. Dick Whittington carries his cat on his shoulder, and Pocahontas wears a feathered headband.

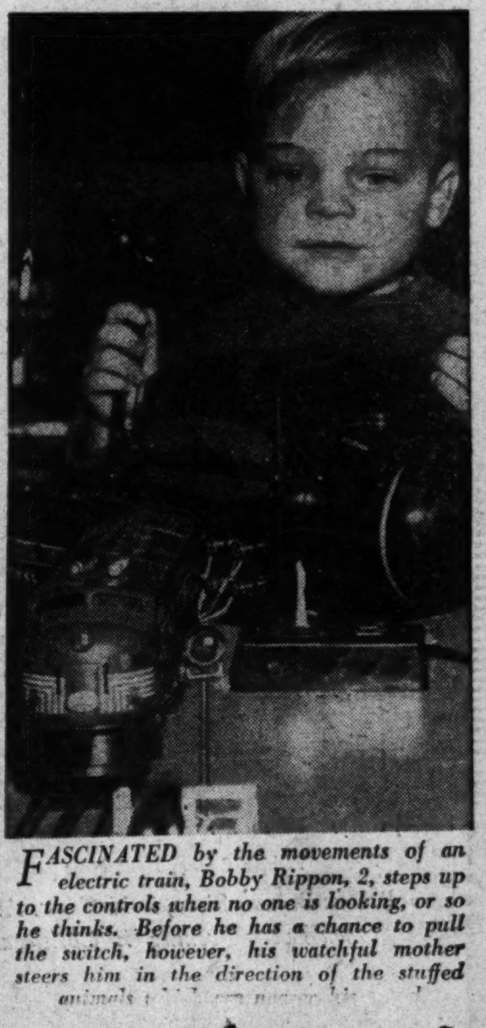
Whims Not All Satisfied

YET, DESPITE these varied offerings, not all the whims and wishes of children have been fulfilled. There is the case of the rosy 3-year-old, who, her blonde curls bouncing angrily, rapidly circled a toy shop crying:

"I want a real, live polar bear!"

She finally settled for a doll, but she was not entirely happy with the compromise.

"I WANT HER for Christmas!" exclaims 4-year-old Sharon Kelley as she spies a wonderful dolly on a trip to toyland. Like most little girls, Sharon loves dolls that look like real babies



FASCINATED by the movements of an electric train, Bobby Rippon, 2, steps up to the controls when no one is looking, or so he thinks. Before he has a chance to pull the switch, however, his watchful mother steers him in the direction of the stuffed animals ...

Harris & Ewing

REHEARSAL for their own television appearance Sunday, December 18, on the International Children's Program is abruptly interrupted at "Howdy Doody" time when the youngsters settle down for some televiewing in the home of Attorney General James Howard McGrath. That's host David McGrath, 12, who will represent the United States on the Sunday show, at far right in the back row. The international set joining him (part of more than fifty embassy juniors to be on the broadcast) are (left to right) in the first row Adelaide Fuchss, 11, daughter of the Swiss Counselor; Bobby Castro, 2½-year-old grandson of the Ambassador of El Salvador; Annie Follebouckt, 6-year-old daughter of the Belgian Embassy's First Secretary; Judy Wang, 11-year-old daughter of the Counselor of the Chinese Embassy; and Alice Hessellund-Jensen, 9-year-old daughter of the Counselor of the Danish Embassy. In the back row (left to right) are 7-year-old Tamin Etemadi, son of the First Secretary of the Afganistan Embassy; 7-year-old Robert Laking, son of the Counselor of New Zealand; Alex Castro, 6-year-old grandson of the Ambassador of El Salvador; and Claire Brennan, 10-year-old daughter of the Counselor of the Irish Legation

Dancing Class Holds First of Three Scheduled Events

By Marie McNair

THE DANCING CLASS, carrying on from year to year, met for the first of its three dances last night at the Sulgrave Club. Mrs. Oscar Chapman, wife of the new Secretary of the Interior, was honor guest at her first party as a Cabinet wife, and there was a special sparkle at Hugo Gouthier's cocktail party yesterday in the person of Ambassador and Mrs. Lewis Douglas' daughter, Sharman, back in this country from London for the Christmas holidays. But wait . . . that's not all that went on yesterday. There was General and Mrs. Robert W. Hasbrouck's cocktail party for Mrs. Nightingale McKinnon, Mrs. Hasbrouck's sister, who is here for a week from her home in Savannah, Ga., and another in a flurry of festivities for Betty Arundel who'll be married December 23 to James H. Stalling, jr.—this time a luncheon by Mrs. Samuel E. Whitaker and Mrs. George T. Sharp, jr., at the Columbia Country Club.

And there was Mr. and Mrs. Royce Powell's afternoon fete for Mrs. Sailing Baruch, a visitor from New York.

Pre-Dance Dinners Held

PRACTICALLY every member of The Dancing Class entertained or was entertained at dinner before they went on to dance at the Sulgrave Club.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon was hostess to a group which included the Harold Jefferson Coolidges and their guest, Henry McIlhenny of Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gardner have a weekend house party for the dance and the dinner they gave beforehand. They are Mr. and Mrs. John Heminway and Edward McIlwaine of New York and Captain Charles Evans of London.

Clarence Hewes, Mr. and Mrs. Tinsley Garnett, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Wilkins, jr., all gave dinners, so did Mrs. Kent Legare, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Nash, and Maj. and Mrs. Julius Wadsworth.

MRS. CHAPMAN'S hostess was Mrs. Barnet Nover who entertained more than 40 ladies at luncheon in the Shoreham's Palladian room. "I'll be there with bells on" was the reply many of her guests had given, for the luncheon so—Mrs. Nover decorated her place cards with pairs of tinkling bells.

Guests included Mrs. Fred Vinson, wife of the Chief Justice, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Robert Jackson, Mrs. Harold Burton and Mrs. Tom Clark, all wives of associate justices, Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador; Senora de la Colina, wife of the Mexican Ambassador; Mrs. Norman Makin, wife of the Australian Ambassador; Mrs. Hume Wrong, wife of the Canadian Ambassador, and Lady Hoyer Millar, wife of the British Minister.

Then there were from the Cabinet circle, Mrs. Louis Johnson, Mrs. J. Howard McGrath, Mrs. Jesse Donaldson, Mrs. Charles Brannan, and Mrs. Edwin C. John-

Respite for Dr. Johnson

University President Stanchly Advocates Reorganization

By Mary van Rensselaer Thayer

Monday, when the National Reorganization Conference opens at the Shoreham Hotel, Dr. Robert Livingston Johnson, president of Temple University, and National Chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, will begin to have a breather.

MRS. THAYER

Since former President Hoover invited him to take over, Bob Johnson has literally knocked himself out physically. Since last August, in an all-out effort to interest American citizens in effecting a probable four-billion-dollar annual saving in Government administration, Dr. Johnson has toured the country, making 116 speeches and over 30 major radio speeches. All this, of course, in addition to his duties as president of a university with an enrollment of 25,000 students.

Anyway, the Johnson efforts have been so successful the Citizens Committee has an active organization in 38 States which is in touch with an estimated 80 million persons. The committee has stirred up so much interest that it is discussed in a weekly average of 350 editorials and about 1000 news stories nationally.

The Tydings Unification bill, passed last August, is the first great victory, and right now the group is working for the passage of the Postoffice bill, Personnel and Budgeting Accounting during the next congressional session.

Bob Johnson, who smiles continually and has never been known to say a cross word, is one of the three original founders of Time, Inc.

In 1935 he left to go into public service, heading relief in Pennsylvania. He remained a year, returning to Time and setting up Life magazine from the business rather than the editorial angle. In 1938 he resigned to devote his life to public service. He's been president of Temple for 8½ years, raising it from a little known institution to a topnotch university with 25,000 students. When the Reorganization Conference is over, the Johnsons will leave for a six weeks' vacation in Nassau.

"You're the tiredest man I've ever seen—upright," was his medico's verdict.

DID YOU KNOW THAT? . . .

The brocade evening bag, fitted with female makeup apparati, and donated by Elizabeth Arden to the Italian Embassy's charity bazaar, was won in the tombola by a visiting Roman Catholice monseigneur? . . .

Hugo Gouthier, perfectionist bachelor Counselor of the Brazilian Embassy, ordered from Paris a fabulous, swan-shaped bed? . . .

The Second Lady of the Land, anticipating the fuller life, has acquired not one but two Phillips Brooks appointment pads? . . .

The George Maurice Morrises, who gave such a gay reception last week honoring Associate Justice of the Supreme Court and Mrs. Tom Clark, have an enormous bullet hole in their elegant front door? And keep it sealed with a removable wooden plug?

There are two "hole" theories. The Eighteenth Century Morris House, once the Peabody Mansion and removed from Danvers, Mass., to Kalorama rd., intact to the last handmade nail, in Revolutionary times was occupied by a Toryish gentleman nicknamed "King" Hooper. Theory one is that our military laddies took a potshot at British General Gage, a Hooper guest. Theory two, infinitely more probable, is our Continental Army GIs were caught swiping twin cannon balls which ornamented the Hooper gate, shot and were shot at.

When new topflight finance officials, such as a Secretary of the Treasury, or a Treasurer of the United States, are installed, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing runs off a few series of twelve still uncut, dollar bills? They can be pleated flat, then sprung like an accordion? . . .

The State Department has been in a pox about John Anderson, husband of Eugenie, new lady Ambassador to Denmark! Reason: the S. D. pays transportation overseas for diplomats' wives. Problem: Should a diplomat's husband be paid for, too? Solution: The State Department paid but with accompanying string—Mr. A. be accorded no official rank! . . .

LIFE AMONGST THE IRON CURTAINISTS:

Washington's politically exiled Poles had more macabre fun at the Library of Congress all Chopin concert. Polish bass, Doda Conrad, old regimist but now an American citizen, chose his own program and beamed the final song to a point slightly above the head of new Communist regimist Ambassador Winiewicz. The selection, happily titled "The Song of the Tomb," and last in a trilogy of old patriotic songs inspired by Poland's perpetual fight for freedom, ended with the following words: "Miraculous was the courage displayed, the people, as a whole, were wonderful, but—alas! there were too many traitors!"

The Polish Ambassador failed to applaud.

PURELY LOCAL:

Mrs. Anne Archbold's son-in-law, Nicol Smith, Friday night lectured under National Geographic auspices on "Caravan to Ladakh." Ladakh is a point near Kashmir, somewhere in the mysterious Himalayas. The Smiths will quit country January 28, this time to probe the somewhat more accessible Middle East. Mrs. Charles Baker, returned from four months in Scandinavia, is reopening Commissions, Inc., on P st., and is scouting for handsome objects to sell last gasp in the Christmas rush.

LADY OF THE WEEK:

Mrs. Homer Ferguson, wife of the Michigan Senator, home after three months in Europe, including 48 hours spent in Tito's capital, Belgrade. In Yugoslavia she was impressed most by the terrible poverty and sky-high prices. Her first glimpse of conditions, driving in from the airfield, was a pathetic struggle of middle-aged men shuffling down the main street prodded by armed guards. Myrtle Ferguson immediately asked for an explanation. The reply was casual. They were men who refused to participate in collective farming and were being taken off to work in the mines. Across the Sava River from Belgrade, Mrs. Ferguson says a new capital is rising. It features many huge government buildings being built almost entirely by volunteer, usually student labor.

"The buildings remind me of the Pyramids," said the Senator's wife, "built by unpaid labor as monuments to a dictator."

This is the sixth of a series of articles on embassy homes and hostesses.

By Elizabeth Maguire

FROM the land of the eucalyptus and the kangaroo, the Ambassador of Australia and Mrs. Norman J. O. Makin have come to Washington to make their home. And the embassy where they live, atop a hill on Cleveland ave., is one of the most homelike in Washington.

Every room in the residence is delightfully cheerful. The drawing room is duck-egg gray and antique green with plum carpeting and a gold satin chair or two, and on the walls are hung modern Australian paintings in soft shades of green.

In the library, paneled in California redwood, are more Australian paintings, these in shades of copper and yellow.

The dining room, where wonderful meals are served, is in buttercup yellow and apple green. The woodwork is in white and in the corner stands an amusing silver screen with red and blue kangaroos making rapid progress across the panels.

When parties are held at the Australian Embassy, everything is prepared on the premises by a superb cook, who cooked at Blair House before Mrs. Truman moved in, bringing the White House cook with her.

Staff Is Devoted

The Ambassador and Mrs. Makin have a devoted staff of workers at the embassy. Unassuming, kind, intelligent people, the pair are ideally adapted to heading a foreign mission. Mrs. Makin's forthright manner and old-fashioned sweetness inspire a respect and immediate feeling of good-will.

This is her first visit to any country outside Australia. Down under, her home is in Adelaide, a pretty town one mile square, filled with red brick houses and flowering gardens.

Mrs. Makin has done little traveling in Australia, but the Ambassador has spent time in all parts of the land. He is familiar with Alice Spring in the center of Australia where iridescent colored rocks rise high in the air, the north cattle lands where lonely mission stations care for the few remaining aboriginals, the sheep stations in the flat country of New South Wales, and the rich little island of Tasmania, south of the mainland.

Served in Parliament

Before his appointment as Ambassador to Washington, Mr. Makin was elected every three years over a period of 27 years to the Commonwealth Parliament, which he resigned from to come here. During the war he was Minister of Navy and Munitions, and was first president of the U. N. Security Council, in London, January, 1946. He came to Washington in September, 1946.

The Chancery where the Ambassador has his offices is just a walk through the garden gate from the embassy. In the Chancery, paneled walls are ivory, carpeting is wine red and overhead are small crystal chandeliers.

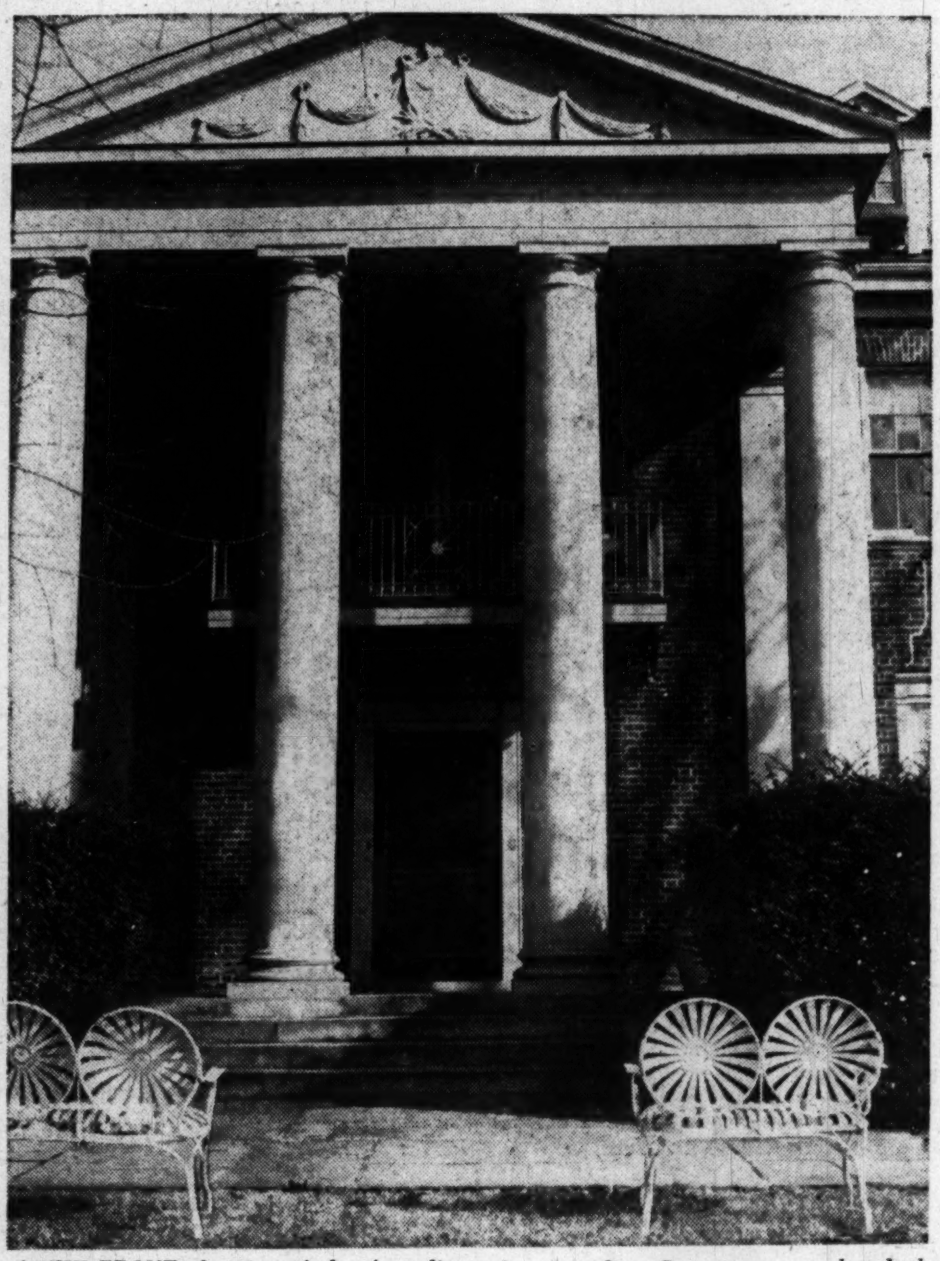
Children of embassy staff members will be treated to a gala Christmas party this year by Mrs. Makin and her grandson, Kent Makin, age 6. Brown-haired, blue-eyed Kent was loaned for the winter by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Makin of Auckland, New Zealand. His 18-month-old brother keeps his mother and father happy, while he brightens up the embassy in Washington.

Awaits First Snowfall

Every day Kent goes to school at the British Embassy with several British contemporaries, including Alison, daughter of the Ambassador and Lady Franks. One of his prize possessions is a silver airplane pin, a gift of Glenn Martin.

When snow flies, Kent will be most interested, as he has never seen it actually fall but has viewed it on distant mountain tops. That and Santa Claus are the two subjects uppermost just now in his sprightly mind.

Lloyd Makin, son of the Ambassador and Mrs. Makin, is studying economics at George Washington University, and he also makes his home at the embassy. In a few days the Ambassador will return from New York, where he has been attending U. N. sessions, and the family circle will be complete.



THE FRONT elevation of the Australian Embassy where guests catch a cool breath on summer days. General George Patton once lived in this house, and it is also the former home of D. J. Dunnigan, from whom the Australian Government purchased the building in 1941. The legation was raised to the status of an embassy in 1946, and Norman Makin was appointed first Australian Ambassador to the United States

MRS. MAKIN, wife of the Australian Ambassador, with her grandson, Kent Makin, age six. Kent is brown-haired, blue-eyed, and sturdy. His principal interest is airplanes, and his prize possession a silver airplane pin from Glenn Martin. Mrs. Makin will give a children's party at the Embassy just before Christmas

AN IMPOSING stairway lends grace and dignity to the entrance of the Australian Embassy. The front door of the hallway opens onto a terrace, where summer teas and receptions are held, and the back elevation faces a circular driveway and rose garden, through which the Ambassador walks to his offices at the next-door chancery. The decor of the handsome chancery is ivory and wine red with small crystal chandeliers overhead

Ice 'Cubes' Made Round

Yuletide Gifts Take Novel Twist

By Gregory Carmichael

HAVE you ever seen an ice cube shaped like a golf ball? Technically, a ball is never a cube, I know, but there's a new gadget just out which actually freezes water into small balls, thus making "round" ice cubes.

It's been said that Christmas shopping cures a man's conscience and saps his imagination. This needn't be true. I've run across a few fancy items this year which are as unusual as they are inexpensive and they're all yours—the suggestions, that is—for the price of a penny post card.

Item one is the "round" ice cube. Most guests can't figure them out, and after a few drinks they don't try to.

Next comes the "Money-Maker," a trifle which innocently stumps even the experts. It's a trick gift, of course, but it carries a message that can be repeated at parties the whole year through. The idea is to ask a well-heeled friend to slip a blank piece of paper into a slot in the side of this Midas-minded machine. Turn a lever and out pops a real, bona fide 5, 10, or 20 dollar bill! The point of the gag, naturally, is that you've "planted" the cash in advance. It's good for a laugh a party.

How many times have you ever felt like a "square meal?" Next time you get the urge why don't you actually cook one in a skillet shaped like a square box. This item is exactly the size of ordinary sandwich bread and any man will love to show off his ability as a chef with a "squarette." Incidentally, the lady of the house can make this one double in brass as a small casserole container.

For the man who insists on giving wearing apparel, why not pick up a pair of hand-painted shorts which feature the "personality" of the receiver. A shop hereabouts puts as much personality into a man's underdrawers as they do his hand-painted ties.

Have you an acquaintance who prides himself on his wolfish characteristics? If so, donate a pair of "howling shorts" which picture a man-sized wolf baying at the moon.

Getting on to friends who have obvious personalities, let's satisfy the man who eats, sleeps, and thinks nothing but fish! Another shop pleases his fancy with a group of ties which incorporate the designs of every known variety of fly. They're clever, executed in excellent taste, and inexpensive.

How about that bothersome friend who has a "special saying"? No conversation, no letter, nothing is complete without the sentence which identifies him as being unimaginative in the choice of words. Cure him for always, or remind him that you're conscious of his fault by having the "saying" baked into hard enamel ash trays. This item is especially presentable to the man whose story, year after year, runs: "Well, business is never so good but what it can be better."

Have you seen the bottle which requires a special combination to open the stopper? This is to top your rare vintages, and comes in handy to stop the guest who never leaves without "just one more." Lock it up and you can always say you've forgotten the combination.

Does the girl-friend have trouble applying lipstick in dark places? Buy her a "Lip-Lite." This gadget is a battery-lighted pocket mirror, purse-sized and set into an attractive red plastic frame. It's ready at a touch for a new lip job, for finding lost shoes in darkened theaters, and for discovering wayward keyholes.

Finally, the duo-gift for the couple who hunt, boat, fish, and take the outdoors in stride the year round. This is a high-powered spotlight which is small enough to be carried like a camera, can be recharged from an ordinary house current, and strapped to the shoulder when not in use. It's all metal, has no parts to be removed, and makes a practical and enduring gift for use the year round.

So we have a gift for the boss, one for Brother Joe, and a few suggestions for people you remember just because they're great guys. No note has been made of stores because of space limitations, but a postal card addressed to me in care of this newspaper will be returned with a sprig of holly and an address as requested.

Tobé Says...

Smartest Resort Color Is 'Beach Black'

Going back to resort fashions, the smartest color for beach and playclothes is black. I first saw "Beach Black" last summer in Italy at Capri, one of the smart resorts in Europe today. It was full of the exciting people who make fashion news—the international smart set, famous actresses and movie stars.

The really chic women all wore black on the dazzling beaches—slim black corduroy slacks, black bathing suits, black sweaters, black pique skirts, black linen sun dresses—sometimes spiked with colored jersey stoles but more often unrelieved except by fabulous jewelry.

Our American designers have made stunning black resort clothes and I'm sure "Beach Black" will be as smart in Florida and California as it was in Capri.

Dancing began at 10 p. m. in Iglehart Hall—the college gymnasium —with music by "The Serenaders" and ended at 2 a. m.

The Cotillion Board, under the direction of Ted Otteson, a sophomore, worked out a new scheme of decoration and lighting that added greatly to the effectiveness of the setting for this dance. Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Fairbanks and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McGrath were the chaperones.

Mme. Henri Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador to the United States, spoke before members of the Naval Academy's Women's Club on Tuesday afternoon, the occasion being the monthly meeting of the group in the commissioned officers' mess of the Naval Academy. Mrs. Elmer M. Jackson, jr., president, presided. Mrs. Bonnet, who was acompanied here by her secretary, Mrs. Nathan C. Wyeth, was introduced by Mrs. Raymond Swartz, program chairman of the club.

Mary Haworth's Mail

For the First Time in Her Dating Experience, Girl 'Made a Play' for a Man, and the Object Of Her Devotion Fled; Can She Win Him Back?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Several months ago I met Ted, a very nice fellow whom I like very much, I think. After a few dates I made a fool of myself, unfortunately, by making a play for him, an error that I have keenly regretted ever since.

I had never before made a play for any fellow and am certainly at a loss to explain my actions. Due to my mistake Ted was careful to avoid my vicinity for the next six weeks, and only in the last few weeks has he been dropping into the office again. But even now it is very obvious that he is keeping out of my way, because when I walk in he departs and doesn't return until he thinks I've already gone.

He doesn't even speak to me nowadays, which makes a situation that is embarrassing to both of us, I feel. One of my girl friends tried to question one of Ted's boy friends about his behavior, but his friend simply said that Ted is a funny person and very bashful.

My problem is that I would like very much to make amends, as I like him very much; but I am at a loss to know how to proceed, or how to go about healing the rift. I had thought of talking to him, but wonder if this would be the correct thing to do. I would certainly appreciate your advice. S. L.

Severe Censure Isn't Justified

DEAR S. L.: As I understand, the popular interpretation of the term "making a play" differs according to whether it is a girl or a man who is "making the play."

That is, if you say a girl is making a play for a man, usually it signifies that she is bidding for his serious interest, trying to induce him to love her truly, and the first moves consist in trying to get him to date her habitually and exclusively.

On the other hand, if you say that a man "makes a play" for a girl, usually it means that his intentions are strictly dishonorable—that he is interested in sexual conquest, not love or marriage.

But as you use the term, in confessional tones of self-condemnation, as if you'd been guilty of improper behavior, I gather your play was different from either of these—and that you are referring to an impulsive attempt to get inside bashful Ted's emotional reserve by aggressively using vampire-bait, namely, petting; and that Ted reacted in shock and fright, from which he hasn't recovered yet.

Friendly Spirit Is Commendable

IF SUCH is the story, it seems only fair to say on your behalf—just in case Ted reads this—that I'm sure your intentions weren't immoral, but rather romantically wistful, in the sense that you liked him so very much that you hoped to spark love in his heart too. And although your tactics were primitively gauche, nevertheless both of you should realize in retrospect that your mistake was due to lack of social training, and not to licentious character or dishonorable design.

So much for the nature of the blunder. As for making amends to Ted for the fright he got, my advice is—don't bother. In keeping your mind and spirit open to the hope of reconciliation, you are demonstrating good psychological health, whereas he, in avoiding your vicinity as if you were the original serpent, is giving evidence of serious ineptitude in human relations.

, In opinion, it isn't compatible with the personal dignity and self-respect that every human being is entitled to maintain, for you to tag after Ted figuratively wearing sackcloth and ashes, begging to be excused for your foolish impetuosity which affected him so peculiarly. Inasmuch as he hasn't the sense to meet you halfway in ordinary courtesy after an instance of mutual embarrassment, you'd simply be playing the fool twice over—to his greater dismay—if you tried to pursue the matter further.

Cookbook Author to Be Capital Visitor

COL. AND MRS. CHARLES H. DONNELLEY'S guest next week will be Marion Lane Sweeney of Boston, who arrives next Monday with her new book, "An Odd Volume of Cookery," under her arm.

Coauthor with her mother, Mrs. Sweeney chose her odd title from the very recipes within the pages of the book. It's a collection taken from the kitchens of one of Boston's most unusual institutions—the Club of Odd Volumes.

Members of the group are book lovers of distinction who meet every Saturday at luncheon and again for dinner before the monthly literary meeting.

Favorite recipes of many famous members are in "An Odd Volume" as well as anecdotes about these people. President Roosevelt's secret of scrambling eggs is also revealed by Mrs. Sweeney.

WAS THERE A CHAIR like this in your grandfather's house? If it's no longer in the family, this reproduction will make a wonderful gift for your husband or wife, as the case may be. It's a copy of a Victorian armchair owned by Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy. Made of mahogany, it comes with a muslin covering so that you can select your own upholstery fabric. Only 1¾ yards are required, with velvet in rich red or green often being used. The chair is made in the Richmond workrooms of the Biggs Antique Co. and is available locally

A GIFT WITH MULTIPLE USES is this graceful reproduction of a Hepplewhite corner stand. Made of solid mahogany inlaid with ebony, it is a singularly attractive occasional piece that requires a minimum of space. On the lower shelf in this picture is seen one of the famous Lippizaner porcelain horses. These figurines were made annually to represent the finest horse of the year in the stables of the Archduke of Hofburg in Vienna. Snow white, with a red-coated rider, this is the horse of 1926. On the top shelf of the stand is a Moss Rose mustard pot

MADE IN DENMARK in the eighteenth century, this beautiful secretary is typical of the Greek revival period. Its classic lines make it a basic and timeless piece that will fit in well with the fine furniture of other periods. Constructed of fruit wood, it has a satinwood inlay featuring a figure of a Roman warrior. Exquisite but substantial, it is one of the numerous antiques imported to this country by the Questers. It is available at their Georgetown shop, 1529 Wisconsin ave. nw., as is the coffee pot in the picture at the right

A THING of usefulness and beauty is this Dutch coffee pot and spirit lamp. It was made of silver about 1755, brings with it all the feeling of warmth and well-being that was so typical of The Netherlands of that era. Coffee was brewed in a large pot on the stove, transferred to this silver vessel and kept warm by the spirit lamp at the afternoon coffee table. Besides its usefulness, it's a gift that can serve as a lovely ornament, with its graceful swirl design and rythmic, curving lines

THIS BUTLER'S TRAY is a copy of one brought from England by J. W. Bramham of Washington. The original is about 150 years old, but the one above was reproduced in solid mahogany at the Biggs' workrooms in Richmond, Va. The edges turn up and there are places for inserting the hands so that it makes a useful tray. It serves also as a coffee table, of course, a convenient and gracious piece of furniture. Seen on the table are a liqueur bottle and glasses of Czechoslovakian glass.

Put Fine Antiques On Christmas List

By Lucia Brown

Something old, something new—which will it be for Christmas?

Either can bring a sparkle to the eye and joy to the heart of any woman who loves beautiful traditional furnishings.

A really old table or figurine, fashioned by a master craftsman centuries ago, is a gift that will long be cherished. It can set the tone for the entire room, become the inspiration for its decorating, give pleasure for a lifetime.

Fine reproductions of old pieces are available now, too. Made by skilled modern craftsmen, these are either an exact copy of old things or an adaptation of their design.

In both spirit and appearance, they are close to the originals. They fit in well when used with antiques, or they can be used alone to create a gracious period room.

If, as recent surveys show, home furnishings are tops on the Christmas lists of American women, either an antique or a reproduction would make an ideal gift. In these surveys, home furnishings were mentioned almost three times as often as any other type of merchandise by homemakers.

Tables, sofas, and chairs were the most-wanted items. Runners-up were rugs, desks, cedar chests, pictures and decorative figurines.

THESE TWO PEASANTS coming home from the fair are rare examples of eighteenth century faience and would be warmly welcomed by anyone who loves beautiful antiques. She is dressed in her best bib and tucker and he wears on his coat a rosette won at the fair for a prize exhibit. The two were modeled in clay in Hungary, covered with a metallic glaze

Little Chinese Specialty Not Hard to Whip Up

Maybe you always head for the quaint little Chinese place. And maybe Egg Foo Yong is the drawing card. Very nice for meatless meals, or you can add ½-pound shredded pork with the mushrooms if you like. Not nearly so complicated as it looks, once you get the hang of it.

EGG FOO YONG

4 tbsp. salad oil	2 tbsp. soy sauce
½ pound fresh mushrooms	2 tsps. brown sugar
4 stalks celery	8 eggs
4 scallions or 1 large onion	1 tsp. salt
⅜ cup drained bean sprouts	1 tbsp. cornstarch
¾ cup drained bean sprouts (½ No. 2 can)	¼ cup cold water

Wash and slice mushrooms. Cut celery in thin strips 1 inch long. Shred scallions or slice onion thin. Heat 2 tablespoons of the oil in a skillet, add mushrooms and fry for 5 minutes. Add celery and onion and fry, stirring, for 2 more minutes. Add bean sprouts, sugar and soy sauce. Remove vegetables to a bowl, and pour the remaining liquid into a cup. Beat eggs with salt until foamy. Pour remaining oil into the skillet, heat slightly, and pour in the eggs. Rotate the skillet until the eggs cover the bottom in a thin layer. DON'T STIR. Cook gently until the eggs begin to set. Now place the vegetables in the center of the eggs, fold over in half and cook each side 1½ minutes. Remove to a warm platter. Mix the water and cornstarch, add the vegetable liquid and a little more soy sauce if you like, and cook until the cornstarch clears. Pour over the eggs and serve.

League for Peace Maintains Triple Goals

By Nicha Soure

THE ROAD to a permanent peace is the main problem of one Washington club—the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

The goal and belief of the league is expressed simply in the last point of the Atlantic Charter, that "all nations of the world, for realistic as well as spiritual reasons, must come to the abandonment of the use of force."

With their ideals constantly before them, board members of the United States League will gather in Washington on February 10 to 12 to consider problems of worldwide interest including United States policy toward Germany and Point Four of the President's program.

(Point Four of the President's program would make available to the backward areas of the world the benefits of United States scientific advances and industrial progress.)

When the national group comes to town, the local branch will assume once again its time-honored job—that of acting as right hand and hostess for the national organization.

Works on Three Levels

FOR THE Washington branch of the league has three characteristics: local, national and international. In its program as a District club, it carries out activities which are purely local in scope. During the fall it has been presenting a series of radio broadcast over WWDC designed to acquaint the public with the League's work and of the responsibilities of the citizen "in a world grown smaller."

Over these Thursday night broadcasts have appeared such international personalities as Mme. Pandit, United States Ambassador from India, who is also a member of the international organization. After Christmas, the League is planning a series of discussion groups on the President's Fourth Point.

Because of its location, no other regional branch is as closely linked with the national organization as the Washington League. It is right here, ready to act at the national's call. The local league lobbies for legislative matters which are important to the United States organization such as supporting the work of the United Nations, ratification of the Genocide Convention and the President's civil rights program.

The close international tie comes through two women who live in Washington and are active in the world organization. Mrs. Annalee Stewart, national president of the United States section, and Mrs. Dorothy Robinson, international treasurer, have both acted as consultative members of the International Executive Committee and have attended yearly meetings of the committee for the past four years.

Has Triple Goal

THE International League has a three-point goal. They advocate (1) total and universal disarmament, (2) the economic and social well-being of individuals and the protection of their civil rights, and (3) a world organization, functioning democratically within the framework of law, for the settlement of international disagreements and for the development of international economic and social cooperation.

To persons who scoff at these lofty ideals, the league points to one of its initial beliefs which has been a great success—a conviction shared with many other organizations.

Back in 1915, when a group of women from 12 countries met in The Hague and planted the seed for the League International, they stated their belief that women's suffrage was a prerequisite for any full contribution by women to world peace.

To a great many people, at that time, giving women equal political opportunity with men seemed not only unnecessary but completely undesirable.

Yet today the principle of equal opportunities for women, not only in political life but in every other field, has circled the globe.

The confidence of the WILPF in the ability of women to work for the good of mankind has been recognized by the Nobel Peace Award to the two great American women who helped organize the first meeting of The Hague. Jane Addams received the award in 1931 and Emily Green Balch in 1946.

As the league members believe with Jane Addams, "nothing can be worse than the fear that one has given up too soon, has left one effort unexpended that might have helped the world."

Authors Honored at After-Theater Party

GEORGE GARROTT and George Copeland, authors of the new play, "The Public Bosom," were guests of honor at an after-theater party last night at the American Newspaper Women's Club. Hostess was Miss Faith Brewer of the State Deparment.

The play, which opened Friday night in the Jefferson Auditorium of the Agriculture Department, will have a repeat performance Monday night.

Mrs. Heinemann Makes Two Sales In One Day with a Post Want Ad

The other day, Mrs. C. B. Heinemann of 3012 43rd St. N.W. used a Post want ad to sell a refrigerator and a radio-phonograph. She found that many Post readers were looking for just the items she had to offer. She had ordered her ad to appear for seven days, but by 10 a. m. on the first day, she had sold both pieces of furniture and cancelled the ad. So the cost to Mrs. Heinemann was really only a few cents.

RECEIVED MANY CALLS
"I'm all for The Post," says Mrs. Heinemann. She reports that about 15 people called her early the first morning. She was sorry to turn so many people away after the sales were made.

CAN YOU FILL THE DEMAND?
Do you have something for the people Mrs. Heinemann disappointed? Tell them about your refrigerator or radio with a Post want ad. You'll find that Post want ads get quick results. Call NAtional 4200 and ask for an ad writer.

Community Judged by Its Schools

By Genevieve Reynolds

Across the desk of Dr. Bess Goodykoontz flow thousands of inquiries on every type of educational puzzler.

But two of the most recent repeaters have special significance for the newly appointed associate commissioner in the Office of Education, Federal Security Agency. These two often-asked questions are by young men: "Tell me how to start a nursery school" and parents' requests as to what kind of school is in such and such a community?

"Before purchasing property, parents want to know the reputation of the school in the vicinity," explains the brown-haired, gray-eyed educator. "Whether they buy or not depends upon how good the school is."

Male Interest Rises

Just why the current desire of young men to start nursery schools, she isn't too sure. However, she believes that young veterans with children of their own are asking the most questions on the subject.

According to the associate commissioner more and more men are returning to the teaching field within the past couple of years. An increasing number of males are going into elementary teaching.

A veteran in the educational field, Iowa-born Dr. Goodykoontz, did a stint of rural and urban teaching in her home State. Later she served at the University of Iowa Elementary School for Demonstration and Research, and as supervisor of elementary schools, Green Bay, Wis. Subsequently she became professor of education, University of Pittsburgh.

Writes On Education

In October, 1929, she entered the Office of Education. She was first assistant commissioner, then director of the division of elementary education. Over the years, she has written scores of articles and publications on educational topics.

Several times she has represented the Office of Education at national and international conferences. She went to Germany in 1946 as a member of the educational mission to survey the educational situation for the United States Office of Military Government. Her many travels have taken her to Latin America as well as Europe.

Dr. Goodykoontz's new staff job calls for liaison work with the Citizens Federal Committee, lay and professional groups concerned with education.

About Holiday Cookie Recipes

Can you please give me a good recipe for Christmas cookies or sugar cookies? Can you use oleomargarine instead of shortening? How can you color granulated sugar at home? How do you make the thin icing that is put on Christmas cookies, for instance on Christmas trees and Santa Clauses? To keep them crisp, should they be kept in a tin box? E. C. L.

SUGAR COOKIES

1 cup shortening (part or all oleomargerine for flavor)
1½ cups sugar
2 eggs
1½ teaspoon vanilla or lemon or combination of vanilla and almond extract
3 cups sifted all purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup milk

Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, and cream well. Blend in well beaten eggs, then add the flavoring. Sift flour, baking powder, and salt together and add to the creamed mixture with the milk. Chill thoroughly to make it easier to roll.

Roll out dough ⅛-inch thick, using a cloth stretched tightly over the board and the leg of a knitted white child's stocking over the rolling pin, both well floured, to make rolling easier. The thinner the dough is rolled, the crisper the finished cookies will be. Cut into desired shapes, place on lightly greased cookie sheet and sprinkle with sugar, if desired.

Bake 8 to 12 minutes in 350 degrees F. oven. When cookies are baked in a moderate instead of hot oven, danger from burning is much reduced.

Oleomargerine is excellent for sugar cookies—gives good flavor and color.

Granulated sugar can be easily colored by dropping a bit of vegetable coloring into the sugar and working it through with the fingers. When evenly colored, spread thinly on waxed paper to dry before using. Cocoanut can be colored the same way. Green cocoanut is especially attractive on Christmas tree cookies.

CHRISTMAS COOKIE FROSTING

¼ cup butter or oleomargerine (soft)
2 cups confectioners sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
dash of salt
3 tablespoons cream (about)
Red and green vegetable coloring

Cream soft butter into one cup of sugar, add remaining sugar, some of the cream, and vanilla, beating until smooth. Do not add all the cream at one time—add only enough for proper consistency.

Before coloring divide frosting in three parts and color some red, some green, and leave the third part white.

To keep cookies crisp allow to cool completely and place in a metal can with a loose cover. If the cover is shut tightly cookies will soften. Also, cookies will not remain crisp for any length of time if frosted.

Could you publish some cake and cookie holiday recipes which could be made now for the holidays? E. D.

Did you see Lucia Brown's recipes for holiday cookies in last Sunday's Washington Post? In addition, here are two more favorite cookie recipes which may be made any day now.

HOLIDAY FRUIT COOKIES

½ cup shortening
1 cup brown sugar (packed in cup)
1 egg
1¾ cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
¼ cup thick sour milk
¾ cup broken pecans
¾ cup candied cherries (cut in halves)
¾ cup dates, cut up

Note: Fresh, moist candied cherries and dates will improve the flavor of the cookies.

Cream shortening, add sugar gradually and cream well. Add well-beaten egg. Sift flour, salt, soda together and add to creamed mixture with sour milk. Add broken nuts and fruits. Drop by teaspoonfuls on a greased cookie sheet and press a piece of candied cherry into the top of each cookie. Bake 10 to 15 minutes at 375 degrees F. for a moist, chewy cookie. Do not overbake. Store in a tightly covered container.

CHRISTMAS TREE COOKIES

¾ cup shortening (part butter or oleomargerine for flavor)
1 cup brown sugar (packed in cup)
2 eggs
2 tablespoons milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups sifted flour
¼ teaspoon baking powder
¾ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
2 cups oatmeal (quick cooking or rolled)

Cream shortening, add sugar gradually and cream until fluffy. Blend in beaten eggs, milk, and vanilla. Mix well. Add flour, baking powder, soda, and salt which have been mixed together. Blend in oatmeal. Cover bowl and set in refrigerator to chill.

In the meantime make filling by cooking 1 cup dried apricots in enough water to cover. When soft, add enough sugar to sweeten and set aside to cool.

When dough is chilled, roll and cut with Christmas tree cutter. Transfer the cut trees to a cookie sheet and place a teaspoon of cooled apricot filling in the center of each. Place a second tree over the first and seal edges by pressing down with the fingers.

Bake at 375 degrees F. for 15 or 20 minutes. Store in a metal container with a loosely fitting lid.

Home Decorations for a Merrier Christmas . . .

Want a snowstorm on Christmas, in your living room? Fasten a celluloid Santa Claus to the bottom of a fish bowl with melted paraffin. Fill the bowl with water. Drop in some moth flakes, one teaspoon of citric acid and one teaspoon of baking soda. But take out the guppies first.

If you want to get away from the conventional Christmas tree this year you might copy Henry VIII, who celebrated with a fir tree, gilded, and decorated with roses and apples.

The pine cone has a place in holiday decorations for a reason known to few. Pine cones, cut lengthwise, show the form of a hand. A little-circulated legend is that Mary, the mother of Jesus, sought concealment under a pine tree while fleeing from King Herod's soldiers. The tree lowered its branches and the soldiers passed by without spying the mother and Jesus. Thereupon the Christ child raised a hand to bless the tree and in this manner marked the cones.

Zinc Removes Soot

A handful of scrap zinc thrown on the fire is an effective soot remover and flue cleaner.

Household Hints

Fried bananas taste good with griddle cakes and thin slices of frizzled ham. Serve with maple syrup.

It's not necessary to use a double boiler for making cream or white sauce. Just be sure you keep the heat low and stir constantly.

Gay Welcome Arranged For Triangle Club Cast

The Director of the Budget and Mrs. Frank Pace, jr., head a group of prominent Washington residents who will serve as patrons of the Princeton Triangle Club's 1949 production, "Come Across," which comes to Lisner Auditorium, December 21.

A gay welcome for the undergraduate musical comedy group by Washington debutantes that day will be complemented by several theater parties for the Capital's older social group, especially alumni of Old Nassau.

Mr. Pace, a graduate of the class of 1933, has 16 other Princetonians and their wives with him as patrons and patronesses of the Triangle Club's fifty-eighth show. The president of the Princeton Club of Washington and Mrs. Richard P. Dunn are patrons as well as four past presidents and their wives: Judge and Mrs. J. Edgar Murdock, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Selby, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Lambert and Mr. and Mrs. Huston Thompson.

Luncheon Is Planned

Judge and Mrs. Murdock and their daughters, the Misses Sarah and Elizabeth Murdock, will entertain the Trianglers at a luncheon in the 1925 F st. club. Mr. Dunn will preside at a buffet supper for the club in the Wardman Park Hotel just before the show.

Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey Lloyd, who will be hosts to the Triangle Club at their daughter's debut in the Carlton Hotel, are also among the show's patrons. Their daughter, Miss Janeth Lloyd is chairman of the debutante committee that will welcome the Tigers to Washington.

Other patrons and patronesses of "Come Across" include Mr. and Mrs. Neville Miller, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Flather, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Gordon, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock, Mr. and Mrs. Milton W. King, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Sullivan, jr., Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Kauffman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Kauffmann, Mr. and Mrs. F. Moran McConihe, Mr. and Mrs. Lee D. Butler, Dr. and Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., and Mrs. Ernest E. Norris.

Washingtonians in Cast

And there are two families with a double interest in the show, both as patrons and parents. Mrs. R. W. Abernethy is mother of the Triangle Club's president, Robert G. Abernethy, whose grandparents are the Rev. and Mrs. William S. Abernethy. Another Washington member of the Triangle Club is Peter F. C. Armstrong, son of Mrs. W. C. Armstrong, who will be a patroness of the show.

Tickets to "Come Across" will go on public sale in the United Nations Club on December 15. The light satire on United States foreign affairs will come to Washington from New York and will tour 11 other cities during the Christmas holidays.

Heated Dishes Preserve Food

Be sure to warm those cold dishes before serving hot food on them. A splendidly prepared meal can be ruined by serving on dishes that will chill the ingredients.

Pop-Corn Balls

Popcorn balls have been a favorite with youngsters for a good many generations. Sometimes we forget what fun we had making them when we were children and deprive our youngsters of the experience. At Christmastime it seems especially appropriate to indulge in old-fashioned fun. And, in addition to being good eating, a few popcorn balls hung on the Christmas tree add to the decorative effect.

Do you remember how to make them? If not, or if you were one of the unfortunate few who never did, here's the recipe:

Add a half cup of sugar to three quarters of a cup of molasses. Cook the mixture until it makes a soft ball. Pour over popcorn and with buttered hands mold the mixture into balls. After you have let them cool, they're ready to eat at once, to be put away for later good times or to be hung on the Christmas tree.

Household Hints

Instead of buying one large package of sterilized gauze for the medicine chest, it will be found more practical to buy several small packages. Then if only one package is used the remaining ones are absolutely sterile after having been handled.

About twice a month use the blower of the vacuum cleaner on pleated lampshades. All dust will be gone in a jiffy and shades will keep their fresh appearance.

If the clothes you wear are looked over each time before they are put away, brushed, buttons tightened, etc., your wardrobe cannot help but be neat and in good condition at all times.

'Gentler Sex' Chalks Up Good Record in Local Realty Sales

By Conrad P. Harness

A MAN, no doubt, coined the phrase, "A woman's place is in the home."

Local lady real-estate agents are making him eat his words. The gals are in a tough business—and they're doing fine, thank you.

It's only been in the last two decades that women have made a big splash in realty sales. Before that it was rarity for a woman to have her own office.

The first woman admitted to the Washington Real Estate Board was Laura Harlan. The date was 1930. Miss Harlan died early this year and her firm is managed by fellow workers, all women, who had been with Miss Harlan for many years. Business is good.

FRANCES V. VEACH
. . . "natural field for women"

4000 Lady Realtors

THE WASHINGTON Real Estate Board now has 13 active, 18 affiliated and 23 associate women members for a total 54 of the gentler sex on its rolls.

The Alexandria - Arlington-Fairfax Real Estate Board has eight women members and one, Miss Eleanor Nugent, was president of the board in 1946. The Montgomery County Real Estate Board lists 3 active women members and six associates.

That women have a definite part in the real estate picture is borne out by the fact that there are over 4000 lady realtors over the Nation. A "realtor" is a member of a real estate board affiliated with the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

In addition to realtors, however, there are a great many women brokers who do not belong to any board but who are noted for their integrity in real estate dealings.

No One Doorway

HOW DO they get in the business of property promotion? There is no one path. Take, for example, Lucille Cook out in Falls Church, Va. Four years ago she decided to sell her own house by herself. She got such a kick out of meeting people and talking up the sales features of her house that she got a broker's license and went into the business.

Her office is in her home on Lee hgy., enabling her to give utmost attention to her clientile at all hours. The last four years have been busy, but lucrative, she reports.

MRS. GEORGE M. GREEN
. . . mother of twins

Some women naturally fall into the business through family background and connections. Margaret J. Dunkley, whose Bethesda (Md.) office sold three quarters of a million dollars' worth of real estate in nine months of 1948, was the daughter of a builder, the wife of a builder and a descendant of famous Sir Christopher Wren, famed British architect of the seventeenth century.

Her father once built a $30,000 home, put it up for sale and asked his daughter to inspect it. She became interested in the sales end of the building game and started in business in 1936. She now has her own office, with four regular salesmen and others on a part-time basis. All sales personnel are men, except one. She was the first woman elected to membership in the Montgomery County Real Estate Board.

Sales by Stars

THE GREAT majority of all women brokers specialize in private homes from $10,000 and up, estates and farm properties. Few dabble in commercial properties.

One of the largest offices headed by a woman is that of Frances Powell Hill, at 1608 20th st. nw. On her staff are two men and six women. They specialize in the better class homes, historical properties and country estates. Accomplishments of Miss Hill include the past presidency of Zonta, an organization of women executives.

Mrs. James L. Dixon helps her husband operate a thriving realty office at 1022 17th st. nw. With astrology as her pet hobby, Mrs. Dixon has great fun combining palm reading and crystal ball gazing with realty sales. Works beautifully, she says.

Astrologically speaking, Mrs. Dixon declares "there's a new home in your future." The problem is to find the right house for the right person. She enjoys most her efforts to find homes and apartments for new arrivals in town. A look at the astrological

Can't call this work! Tom Sandoz, head of Sandoz, Inc., local real estate firm, believes skilled women brokers are an asset to any office. Some of his sales ladies have been with him for 15 years. $1,900,000 Is Low Bid for Building

A low bid of $1,900,000 was received for construction of a proposed 13-story office building at 14th, H sts. and New York ave. nw. It was submitted by Jos. F. Nebel Co. to the sponsors, Virginia Hotel Co. Other bids ranged up to $2,050,000.

Otis Elevator Co. submitted the low bid of $196,985 for installation of elevators. Arrow Wrecking and Lumber Co. bid $2685 for demolition of present buildings on the site.

Connecticut's name comes from the Indian word "Quonectecut" meaning long river.

Lady Brokers Play Big Role in Realty Affairs

Must Like People

THE Georgetown area of the Northwest has attracted several successful women brokers. Dorothy G. Wood for instance, opened her own office in 1944 at 2531 P st., in Georgetown, after working for a large downtown brokerage office.

Her office has the homey touch, is furnished like a living room with definitely an informal atmosphere. She and her two salesmen operate all over the metropolitan area but are Georgetown specialists.

Another Georgetown office is that of Mrs. Emery Smith at 1909 Q st. She has operated in the Georgetown area for over 14 years, but is also familiar with the Northwest area and country properties.

What is essential to success as a woman broker? Mrs. Frances V. Veach, agent and property manager for Columbia Pines, large Fairfax County development, says one must like the profession, enjoy meeting people and making friends, and above all, must be available at all hours for sales consultations.

Mrs. Veach, a young woman with a Miss America figure and good looks to accompany it, has been in the business since early last year. She feels it is a natural field for a woman, one in which the rudiments can be easily mastered.

Don't Be Discouraged

MRS. L. McGEE KING, a broker for the past 10 years in Arlington, says essentials of success are a liking for houses, people, and hard work. "No other business would have satisfied me," she said. "It has repaid me many times in both money and pleasure."

Mrs. King's advice to beginners: "Don't be discouraged." She says real estate is a fine career for young college women. She estimated it would take at least a year to gain enough knowledge to make a start towards a successful career as a broker. "I'm going to stay in it until I'm in a wheelchair," she exclaimed.

Dorothy Winston, prominent broker at 1424 K st. nw., indicated the profession held great financial rewards for those persons with perseverance, personality, education and ethics. Clients do not shie away from women brokers, she said. The individual is respected for what he is and what he knows.

She and her husband operate the office, have been successful in sales in the District, Virginia and Maryland. "This business is a challenge," she added. The up-to-date broker must continually educate him or herself so as to better serve the public, she said.

Many of the successful brokers have combined marriage and motherhood with sales careers. Mrs. George Mason Green has been helping her husband at his Arlington office for the last 10 years. "Came to work one day and have been here ever since," she remarked.

She finds plenty of time to raise her 13-year-old twins and sell Virginia homes and estates. The firm has a good sales record in finding customers for large, expensive country estates.

Goal of $15,000 Year

THESE are but a few of the dozens of capable, successful lady brokers around town who have built thriving businesses. There's Mrs. Romye Lamborn, Nettie Mae Burgess, Nellie Lowe Cassel, Inez Cushard, Emma Scott Moore, Cornelia Bowie, Roxana B. Doran, Helen Norris, Katherine Shoemaker and many more.

Two women head the firm of C. Allen Sherwin, Inc., at 4241 Wisconsin ave. nw. Mrs. Thomas E. Edwards is a prominent Virginia broker. There's Mrs. Wm. Laughlin at McLean, Va. The list is practically endless.

Sandoz, Inc., headed by Thomas Sandoz, at 2 Dupont Circle, is star-studded with efficient lady brokers, with 6 women out of 12 sales persons. Mr. Sandoz said he has experienced very good luck with the girls. Two have been with him over 15 years and all work very hard.

Nearly all of the women with Sandoz specialize 100 percent in residential properties in Georgetown and the Northwest. They leave commercial properties up to the men. And the financial rewards? Mr. Sandoz said income varies from year to year, but a goal of $10,000 to $15,000 per year would not be out of sight for a hard-working saleswoman.

Current estimates are that by 1956 the country will have 24 million television sets.

Assured Future

Sumner

A Miller Controlled Community

Residents of Sumner must be in sympathy with the high ideals set for its development, making it an outstanding home community

THE COMMUNITY THAT RECEIVED FIRST PRIZE

From the National Association of Home Builders of the United States

For A Large Single Family Home Development

For

"ingenuity, originality and soundness of design and construction and suitability of the project to its location

The future, more than the present, is of utmost concern when location of a home is under consideration.

Washington just now is giving material evidence of vagaries of evolution, where commercial expansion is invading residential precincts—a condition that will increase rather than diminsh as time goes on.

The section of Sumner makes a strong appeal. Here is literally a custom-made community, where the beauties of nature are ingeniously married to architectural genius—and neighborhood of character with homes of distinctive charm result.

Presiding over all, censoring every feature and phase of development, is the protection of Miller Control, insuring for the future the exclusiveness which Sumner enjoys today.

Every home in Sumner must be Miller-designed and Miller-built—for the Miller standard demands consistency in every minor and major detail.

Thus Sumner commends itself to those who love nature, appreciate the niceties of living and want the security of the serenity of an undisturbed future.

In Sumner you'll find splendidly expressed the superb taste of Miller design and the excellence of Miller built.

Two Revere Quality Homes To Be Shown Last Time Today

TODAY will be the last day for public showing of two Revere quality homes here, sponsors have announced. They were first opened four weeks ago.

The exhibit homes, both furnished, are located at 5914 Anniston rd., Alta Vista Terrace, in Bethesda, Md., and Hollin Hills, 2 miles south of Alexandria, off Fort Hunt rd.

The Maryland home, a three bedroom rambler all on one floor, was built by Carl M. Freeman, Inc., to sell for $14,950. The Hollin Hills house is built on three different levels on a hillside, has three bedrooms and sells for $17,500.

Sunday visiting hours are from 10 a. m. until dark. An admission of 25 cents is charged adults at each house. Funds are used for welfare work among underprivileged children by the Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The showing of the model houses here is part of a drive to spark construction of modern quality homes costing under $20,000. The drive is sponsored nationally by the Revere Quality House Division of the Southwest Research Institute of San Antonio, Texas.

The Freeman firm has announced plans for construction of 50 similar type homes in the same area—with 15 already completed or nearing completion.

39 Homes Planned For Landover Site

Greeley rd., in Landover, Md., will be the site of 39 homes to be erected by Hamilton Construction Co. for Queen's Chapel, Inc., owner. Homes will be two-story and no basement, of frame construction with a 24 by 17 foot floor area.

The firm has been building in the same area and this is a continuation of an existing building program. A building permit application has been filed.

Alexandria Bank To Erect Branch

A 2-story brick branch bank at Hume st. and Mount Vernon ave., Alexandria, Va., is planned by the Citizens National Bank, located at King and Asaph sts., Alexandria. Architect will be Robert A. Willgoos. Plans will be completed in about two weeks and bids from contractors will be asked.

Construction Permits Drop

Building volume in the District of Columbia during November, as measured by permits issued at the District Building Inspector's Office, was $4,856,701, a drastic drop from October's total of $9,383,320, but topping the $4,369,450 of November a year ago.

Last month's volume include permits for 102 brick homes with an average estimated building cost of $10,000 each, eight apartment buildings at $155,000 and one $1,500,000 school.

When completed, the construction will house 102 families in the single family brick homes, 34 families in the apartment buildings.

Geographically, the permits for housing units are: 42, Northeast; 60, Southeast; 33, Northwest, and 1, Southwest.

New Sales Plans Spur Home Boom

By T. E. Applegate

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (AP).—A new sales technique is pushing the housing boom along at a dizzy pace.

George W. Warnecke, New York building financier, thinks it may make 1950 a record year for home construction.

Behind the new method is expert calculation aimed at making people dissatisfied with their present living quarters.

It's a streamlined application of the long-tried "model home" plan. Here's the way it works:

You read an enticing advertisement and drive out to inspect a new housing development. The model is well landscaped, tastefully and skillfully decorated (perhaps by a nationally known interior decorator). Its kitchen has all the latest mechanical aids. A salesman is on hand to point out desirable features you might not notice.

Somehow, when you get back home the old place looks a bit shabby.

Shortage About Over

CALL it salesmanship, merchandising or any other name—it's going to keep home builders busy as long as national income stays high, Warnecke said in an interview.

"Although the housing shortage, as such, is practically over," he said, "there's almost no limit to the market for replacement housing."

But this market needs to be developed, he asserted.

As the supply of new housing catches up with existing demand, the new type of home builder is busy creating new demand to expand his market.

And he has been notably successful in many cases. In such metropolitan areas as New York and Detroit, for example, entire projects of several hundred houses have been sold in advance from a single model home.

Technique Is Borrowed

THE new technique is borrowed from the automobile industry, Warnecke said, just as many leading home builders have adapted assembly line methods to make their mass-production of houses a more efficient operation.

"The car-makers found out long ago," said the New York mortgage financier, "that they could continually create new markets for their products simply by making the older models obsolete when compared to the new. This has resulted in better and better cars being produced and has helped sustain a healthy, thriving industry which is always a strong prop to the national economy.

"Possibly, recent developments in the merchandising of new homes will help do away with the boom-and-bust patterns which have always plagued the housing industry in the past."

Homes at Kensington

A permit application for 29 more houses at Kensington Estates has been filed by Kensington Estates, Inc. Dwellings are one story and basement, of brick. Over 150 houses will be erected in the project.

Kitchen Comfort

For greater kitchen comfort during meal preparation, cut off the flow of heat into the kitchen and prevent overheating.

FOR A GAY CHRISTMAS

Why not make wreaths from greens gathered out of doors or snipped from the back of the Christmas tree? Make a sled center piece for the table and a wooden tree for cards. Pattern 321 shows every step and gives actual-size cutting guides. Price of pattern is 25 cents.

Construction Jumps Toward Postwar High

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Engineering construction contract awards this week jumped to $302-115,000, the second highest total since the war, Engineering News-Record reported today.

The engineering construction weekly said the total was boosted by an award of 162 million dollars by the Atomic Energy Commission for a plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn. The postwar record still is the 362,-300,000 for a week in December, 1948 during which a 200-million-dollar-contract was awarded for a Texas to New York pipeline.

This year's previous high was $257,300,000 in mid-August. The week's $302,115,000 total was 38 per cent above last week's $219,-647,000 and 261 percent above the $83,693,000 for the corresponding 1948 week. It brought the year's total of heavy construction awards to $7,815,604,000, or 17 percent greater than for the same period last year.

Private construction contract awards totaled $78,490,000, a decline of 32 percent from last week's $115,496,000 but 157 percent above the $30,500,000 for the like 1948 week. Major projects included an eight - million - dollar apartment building in New York and a $7,-200,000 home development in Cincinnati.

Public construction awards amounted to $223,625,000 or 115 percent above last week's $104,-151,000 and 320 percent above the $53,193,000 for the corresponding week last year. The atomic plant award overshadowed all others in "F|

Snow Time . . . Sun Time

Whistle Stopping

Florida's Really Pretty Nice

By Orval Hopkins

LAST time I was in Florida (first time, too, if you have to know) was some years ago and at the insistence of our Navy, which had a dreamy confidence that I would be able to learn something about radar. This trust was only barely justified, but we did have a nice couple of months in and around the Hollywood Beach hotel. Polly was 3, and Mary Jane, my wife, was—well, Mary Jane was about to have another.

We took an apartment a few blocks north of the Hollywood Beach (where my classes were conducted) owned by a man named Datesman. Datesman was the heart-o'-gold type, rough to look at and rough to talk to, but kind of creamy inside. He tendered us a tidy little apartment on the beach front and even trimmed a couple of bucks off the tariff he generally soaked people.

Hollywood seemed to us a delightful little town. I have since seen it described in the newspapers as a hotbed of vice — gambling and such. We didn't see any of it (which doesn't exactly prove anything) and it may have been that everybody was making so much legitimate money he didn't need to go vicious.

Anyway, it had a drawbridge over a canal connecting the town with the hotel and environs; it is a long, palm-lined main drag called Hollywood blvd.; it had a nicely laid out country club almost in its center, where we repaired a couple of times for refreshment; it had neat, shady streets, most of them named after Presidents of the United States, and it had a ball park across the tracks labeled "Training Grounds for the Baltimore Orioles."

We visited Miami and Miami Beach, and took a speedboat up the canal to Fort Lauderdale. We found all of these places fascinating and were not even dismayed when the speedboat in which we were speeding ran out of gas. We made it back to Hollywood by car.

The Navy, in time, graduated me and, as you may have read, we won the war.

FLORIDA, of course, is literally crawling with rare places where you can swim and swing and other wise loll around in unconscionable ease. Take Daytona Beach. I have some material here which says the surf has pounded the coast into an unbroken stretch of smooth, hard-packed sand, 23 miles long and more than 500 feet wide at low tide. Good thing the surf did it, is all I say. Cost them a purty to get it done by hand.

HORSE RACING goes on in Florida from now until April 19. Tropical Park has the first 40 days, with Hialeah and Gulfstream parks to follow . . . In case you've been nodding somewhere, Santa Clara and Kentucky meet in the Orange Bowl January 2. (I'm attempting to get a bob down on Santa Clara.)

FORT MYERS' proud boast is that "anything you want under the sunny skies of Florida can be found in Lee County." Fishing, swimming, golf, lovely scenery, beautiful homes are all there in abundance. Also, there's Thomas A. Edison's winter home, now open to the public . . . The Florida East Coast Railway is starting a new daily streamliner service southbound from Midwest cities December 15, and northbound from Florida East Coast points on the seventeenth. The train will be called the New Royal Palm.

OUR OWN Silver Lining Dept.: "A detailed survey by the Miami Research Bureau shows the attendance at churches in the area exceeds that for the three horse and four dog racing tracks."

BOCA RATON Club has completely refurbished its "expanse of 2000 acres of luxury" and now refers to itself as "Florida's contribution to the Hotel Hall of Fame." To guide and instruct its guests, the club has Fred Perry in tennis, Tommy Armour in golf, and William Jay O'Brien in aquatic sports. Furthermore, "the prince of designers, Norman Bel Geddes, has completed supervision and construction of a series of private homes situated in what will be known as Boca Raton Park."

A SNAPPY booklet has been got up and distributed by the Rock Island. It tells all about hotels, motels, dude ranches, spas, watering places, railroad accommodations and virtually anything else you'd want to know about the Southwest, particularly New Mexico and Arizona. It contains pictures and maps, and also goes into essentials like prices.

Tourists Get Price Break In Europe

By Ernest Agnew

LONDON, Dec. 10 (AP).—You Americans planning to visit England or Europe are getting a break.

The break is in prices due to devaluation of the pound sterling and every other western currency except the Swiss franc and the Spanish peseta. Even the value of the Italian lira was cut by an Italian government order allowing it to find its own level on the free market.

You'll find generally that right now your dollars will buy about 30 percent more than they would last summer, that travel costs are cheap by American standards and de luxe hotel accommodations about 15 to 20 percent under the New York scale.

Prices for fine Dutch glassware, for Belgian lace, British woolens or old silver, French perfumes or Parisian clothes will seem relatively low—that is, in comparison with prices last summer.

Watch Out

BUT that's right now.

Prices are expected to rise within six to nine months, both because of costlier imports bought with devalued currencies and because of likely wage increases.

Travel bureaus throughout Europe say, though, that they don't expect the anticipated price rise will average more than 10 to 15 percent.

The lure of those lower prices will call more American tourists to Europe next summer than ever before, even more than in the palmiest days of the 1920's, Government travel organizations forecast. They're trying to increase the number still more with thousands of colorful, compelling posters.

An Associated Press survey of how devaluation will affect the tourist in Europe gave this information:

Peace It's Wonderful In Old Williamsburg

By Glendy Culligan

HISTORY has a way of leaving out a lot of things people really want to know, while stuffing them with facts and dates that nobody ever remembers.

So, in historic Williamsburg, the hostesses in their neat ersatz skirts are glib with the names of dead and forgotten governors, and quick to tell you which beds George Washington slept in. But they don't ever tell you how many people he kept awake by his snoring; or whether Patrick Henry was late for dinner the night he made his famous "treason" speech in the House of Burgesses.

Nor does history record the fuss Mrs. Henry probably made when she heard about it: "Now, Pat, what do you want to go stirring things up for, just when we're getting settled and meeting some nice people? What will the neighbors think?"

DESPITE these drawbacks, the modern tourist will find much to recommend Virginia's ancient capital city. For today's urbanites, irked (or even possibly soothed) by Capital Transit's talking streetcars, pushed by fellow civil servants in a rush for the 5:05 bus, and trampled in the cafeteria line, old Williamsburg offers true haven. Peace—it's wonderful—courtesy of John D. Rockefeller and the Williamsburg Corporation!

Five hours by bus from Washington, somewhat less by a combination of bus and plane, the one-time Virginia government seat is an ideal weekend spot for District residents. Most District of Columbia folks have already been told that modern, resort hotels provide the necessary comfort for a Williamsburg pilgrimage. But those who expect to pop in on Mr. Rockefeller unexpectedly must expect to be relegated to some less elegant hostelry on the outskirts. Even in wintertime, Williamsburg draws a pretty full house.

Those tourists who do descend without warning, only to find themselves turned away by desk clerks at the Williamsburg Inn and Lodge, will be courteously referred to Williamsburg's enterprising Chamber of Commerce, which places guests in private homes.

Reservations Needed

ADVANCE reservations will also stand you in good stead at the Travis House, celebrated for its fine traditional Southern cooking. Williamsburg residents themselves hanker after a night out now and then, providing a little unfair competition for ye tourists. Best to cross the street and skirt Travis House altogether if you don't have a reservation on a crowded weekend, for the delicious, authentic Williamsburg odors of baked and roasted goodies, which float out of its half-open windows, will make you feel sorry for yourself when you're on the outside.

In this dejected mood, it's well to remember that Chowning's Tavern, across and up the street, serves an enviable Brunswick stew and a fine deep-dish apple pie,

Yucatan and Mexico City Charm 'Yanqui' Tourists

By C. Lew Herschel

WITH ABOUT 10 days of freedom and Mexico on our mind, we flew out of Miami—Pan American escorting us—one morning about 9. Stopping just long enough in Havana for an immigration check, we set off again for Yucatan.

Our recollection of Yucatan was merely the "hump" to be drawn on the map of Mexico, and we were surprised to have in our view, after two hours of flying over jeweled waters, wide expanse of pineapplelike plants, called henequen, fields of corn, and windmills dotting the landscape. The henequen, we learned, is used for hemp—furnishing the main industry of the peninsula; corn is the "staff of life" and the windmills furnish water supply from the underground rivers.

Our point of landing was Merida—with a four-hour wait between planes. Merida we had never heard of until Pan American developed its accessibility. It now boasts a modern airport, with streamlined service, restaurant and bar. There in the heart of tropical flat land, we were ushered into cool, comfortable customs offices to await formal entry into Mexico and baggage checking. The procedure was necessarily slow—so few of us spoke Spanish, so few of the Mexican officers spoke English.

One of our fellow travelers carried an unabridged dictionary in a typewriter case—unusual to say the least. The Mexican officers passed it around for inspection, shook it, turned the pages. Our half-full bottle was passed around for "smelling"—apparently met approval. After almost two hours, we were checked OK. A tourist agent met us with a 1947 Pontiac and an invitation to "see" Merida and Yucatan.

Strange Contrasts

YUCATAN brought strange contrasts. We visited Merida with its modern hotel, and its gaudy Turkish baths, its streets with figures of animals and birds to denote the names for the Indians who cannot read, and the daily market with hordes of fascinating wares, and strange smells. Our road then led to the ancient Mayan ruins at Uxmal—along a modern highway, practically devoid of other travel except the ever-present patient little burro with his back-breaking load. Our driver, indifferent to the side of the road, swerved from right to left at his pleasure, tooted the horn for the sake of the noise, and pointed out spots of interest with both hands off the wheel and refused our American cigarettes—all in sign language, for he spoke no English.

Along the isolated road, we spotted tiny villages—houses of adobe brick, built in circular style, with thatched roofs, all close together and on the very edge of the road. From open-door views, apparently the only furniture is the cool sisal hammock used for sleeping. Cooking and eating appear to be done under an extra shelter back of the dwelling.

The men, small in stature, wear short white trousers, with a loose jacket, no shoes, always a hat or a white cloth tied bandanna style around the head for protection from the tropical sun. The women wear a straight kimono-type of dress—white, beautifully embroided with bands of color, no shoes, endless petticoats hanging below the dress, hair brushed back smooth and tidy with bows of gay colors at the back of the head. Little chubby black-eyed children scantily dressed, dogs of all breeds, and goats are everywhere. The villages have no building plan, no streets, native shops and houses are side-by-side, but every little village has its big "Coca Cola" and "Pepsi-Cola" signs.

Amazing Ruins

AFTER a 30-mile ride, we arrived at Uxmal, operated by the Mexican government. We paid a small entrance fee, tramped through harsh grass and up steep stony paths to the most amazing ruins of the Mayan civilization. The pyramids or temples, built about 90 A.D., later covered by the Spanish, are now being restored. The buildings, of tremendous size, with perfect angles and arches built without the aid of metal implements, opened our eyes to the accomplishments of a people we consider primitive.

Our limited time made us hurry back to the airport to board the Compagne de Mexico plane (a Pan American subsidiary) for the flight to Mexico City. The ship, a DC-4, was manned with a full Mexican crew, and afforded excellent service. Beer and Tequilla cocktails, to our surprise, were served complimentary, also a dinner with a flare of Mexico—Arroz con Pollo, excellent coffee and even dessert.

The plane was carrying a capacity load of American newspaper people and travel agents bound for the convention of the National Association of Travel Agents in Mexico City and landed on schedule at the busy International Airport. A reception committee of government officials and photographers armed with flashlight bulbs greeted us, hurried us off into waiting taxis for our hotels. After a short run, we were in the heart of beautiful Mexico City. Broad avenues, lined with modernistic buildings, ablaze with typical Broadway electric signs gave us a small taste of the pleasures in store for us during our week's stay. After a good night's rest in a big, comfortable,

Busways Lead To Sunshine

THE NATIONAL TRAILways Bus Association is distributing three-color folders displaying trunk route schedules to Florida, Gulf Coast points ,the Southwest, and the Pacific Coast.

They show service to these areas via four major routes—the Atlantic States route to the west coast of Florida and to Miami; the "Dixieland" route to points in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, to Texas and the Coast, with only two changes between Washington and Los Angeles; the "Sunshine" transcontinental route with frequent service through Asheville and Memphis; and the "Arrow" route through Knoxville, Nashville, and Memphis.

The two latter routes extend to the Pacific Coast either through Dallas and El Paso, or through Oklahoma City, Amarillo, and Albuquerque.

Also shown are the daily schedules between Washington and New York.

Trunk route folders are being distributed in Washington through the local terminal, 12th st. and New York ave. nw.

And They'd Probably Do That

Ski Spots Do All But Bring Snow Into Your Room

IF YOUR idea of some fun in the winter is to flop in the snow, fall flat on the ice, or get a face-full of slush on a toboggan run, the winter sports centers are waiting for you. They absolutely guarantee snow and they do everything but fetch it into your room. They'll probably do that, for a small pourboire.

Chateau Fontenac in Quebec, for example, has what it chooses to call a "new deal for skiers" —all-expense winter rates for periods of 3, 7 and 10 days, which go into effect New Year's Day. The tours include transportation from the Palais Station in Quebec to the Chateau and return; room with bath, meals, transportation to the popular skiing center of Lac Beauport and return, instruction at the famous Ski Hawk School, directed by a man named Fritz Loosli, use of the alpine lift at Beauport, use of the Chateau Frontenac's skating rink and mile-a-minute toboggan slide any time they are in operation.

Prices per person for the 3-day stay are: double room and bath, $49; single room and bath, $53; 7-day stay, double and bath, $110; single and bath, $118; 10-day stay, double and bath, $151; single and bath, $162.

NEW HAMPSHIRE reports that rates are expected to stay at about last year's level and says you can get "a lot of fun, comfort, food and service from $5 to $10 a day, or even less." The skimobile at North Conway starts operating on December 15, and the restaurant at the base station on December 21. Hannes Schneider's Eastern Slope Ski School opens December 17.

In Franconia Notch, the Cannon Mountain Aerial Passenger Tramway got moving yesterday. Two new trails have been built and the practice trail near the Valley Station has been smoothed and widened. Rates will be the same as last year. Franconia Ski School will be headed by Paul Valaer.

At the Belknap Mountain Recreation area, Gilford, the old 800-foot Viking slope is being built into a 2000-foot slope. Rates on the 3200-foot chairlift and tows will be the same as last year, including the special $5, five weekday ticket.

Thorn Mountain Ski Area, with its new 3900-foot chairlift, announces a new practice slope, "Cosy Canyon," where night skiing is planned. A new trail from halfway to the base has been cut and work is continuing on others.

Mount Sunapee State Park has added a new long semitouring trail and has another short link trail under construction. A warming hut and ticket booth for the practice slope and a Sno-Cat for trail maintenance will be new additions. The 3200-foot chairlift is scheduled to begin its runs on December 15. Mount Sunapee Ski School again will be headed by Mal MacKenzie.

WINTER SPORTS will be featured more extensively in the Nation's national forests, the American Express says, going on to mention such top ski spots as Mount Hood's Timberline Lodge and Mount Baker National Forest in Oregon, Shasta National Forest, California; Winter Park in Arapaho National Forest, and Aspen, on the edge of Holy Cross National Forest, Colorado, and Magazine Lodge in Ouachita National Forest in Arkansas.

BIG BROMLEY, Manchester, Vt., has something it calls the "Manchester Ski Deal," to be confused by no means with the Manchester Guardian. Under this arrangement you can, for $7.95 a day, use all ski lifts and tows and partake of ski instruction at either Bromley or Snow Valley—plus bunk and board with the exception of lunch.

THE CROSSROADS, skiers' restaurant at the entrance of Snow Ridge, Turin, N. Y., has been bought by Jack and Lorraine Mumford of our city. The Mumfords are featuring a Saturday night bean party menu and have installed a big old-fashioned crock with spigot which helps to have hot buttered rums ready at a moment's notice.

SPLIT ROCK LODGE (Pa.) has a ski area it calls Big Boulder. A new novice-intermediate trail is being cut from B. B.'s 2220-foot crest and will be patterned after Mont Tremblant's celebrated "sissy Schuss." Split Rock's will be called the Bunny Schuss. Construction of a new 15-meter ski jump for competitive meets and mettlesome racers will be another attraction during the season.

CHANTECLER, at Ste. Adele en Haut, Quebec, points out that "Quebec's ski area north of Montreal is the most highly developed, concentrated ski district on the North American continent . . . All types of accommodation are offered from the larger, more elaborate hotels to the small pensions. Rates vary from $6 to $15 daily, meals included. Through this district runs the famous Maple Leaf Trail, 100 miles in length."

Orlando Takes High Pride In Its Location

ORLANDO, FLA.—This city is located geographically almost in the center of the peninsular State at the hub of tourist, business and recreational activity for the entire central Florida area.

Within less than a day's travel from Orlando there are countless places to visit and explore.

First of all, there is Silver Springs, 84 miles to the north, a wonder that has drawn people from all parts of the world for 20 years. Fifty miles to the south is located Cypress Gardens, made famous by its profusion of flowers, pretty girls who are also champion water-skiers and boat trips through a cypress grove.

Only a few minutes drive from the gardens is Bok Tower, memorial of Edward Bok.

St. Augustine, shrine of early American days, is a must on the traveler's calendar. Among the many sights in this coastal city is the Spanish Fort, oldest house in the United States, slave market, oldest school in the United States, picturesque streets and Fountain of Youth.

Probably one of the State's most unusual features is the abundance of natural mineral springs, of which several are located near Orlando. Sanlando Springs, a tropical paradise only 10 miles from the city, offers year-round swimming, electric boat trips, nature paths, and picnic grounds.

And about 18 miles from Orlando is Rock Springs, where millions of gallons of pure water gush from the side of a rock every day. This Orange County-owned park is open to the public at no charge. A favorite spot for swimming, camping and picnicking.

For those who long for the tang of salt air, Orlando is only a day's jaunt from either the Atlantic or Gulf Coast, with excellent highways in both directions.

Many Going South by Rail

EARLY season requests for reservations on Seaboard trains to Florida and other Southern resorts point to an unusually large volume of winter vacation travel, according to C. E. Bell, general passenger traffic manager of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad.

"Holiday specials," to be operated jointly by the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad and the Seaboard, will provide additional service for Florida-bound travelers. Featuring modern coach and Pullman equipment, these specials will leave from New York and Washington on December 17 and 23.

Inauguration of Seaboard's winter service will be marked by the reestablishment of the all-Pullman "Orange Blossom Special" on December 15. The "Orange Blossom" will carry the newest type of roomette-bedroom cars as well as provide drawing rooms, compartments and berth accommodations. Leaving New York at 1:45 p. m. and Washington at 6:05 p. m., arriving in Miami at 3:25 p. m. the following day, the "Orange Blossom" provides dining car service and ample buffet-lounge facilities.

For New England patrons, sleepers will leave Boston at 8:30 a. m. and merge with the "Orange Blossom Special" passing Washington at 6:05 that evening.

Orleans Leased

Mrs. George Bernstein and Irving Podolnick have leased the Orleans apartment hotel at 18th st., off Collins ave., Miami Beach, for the coming year. George Bernstein is the operator of the Atlantis Hotel.

Hotel Queries Up 10% in Miami Area

MIAMI, FLA.—Hotel Associations of the Greater Miami area report that reservations and inquiries are up 10 percent, and like increases in early season travel are reported by air lines and railroads.

A reason given for the increase in travel is lowering of hotel prices.

Rates for some of the swankier suites in some of the area's plush ocean-front hotels have been cut 10 to 20 percent, and the managements of these hotels are advising their usual seasonal guests. This is in line, it is explained, with the general "leveling off" trend throughout the Nation.

The "more for less" policy also is being adopted in the entertainment field.

Miami also is receiving considerable business through stopovers made in Miami by air tourists going to and from vacation spots in the Caribbean area. The United States-Caribbean travel has been markedly stepped up by air lines offering special rates to vacationers throughout the country.

Cuba, Haiti, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Jamaica and the Bahamas all are benefiting by the air tourist trade and British possessions are expecting the devaluation of the pound will be a means of luring more visitors.

Biltmore Open at Palm Beach

PALM BEACH, Fla.—The new Palm Beach Biltmore, latest addition to the galaxy of Florida resort hotels, held its formal opening Saturday. The towers of the Biltmore, in which are beautifully appointed pent house suites, are imposing landmarks for miles around this Florida resort.

The 550-room Biltmore was enlarged, refurnished and redecorated during the recent summer months to the tune of more than a million dollars under direction of Daniel E. Taylor, president of the Palm Beach Biltmore Co. Taylor, who is a member of the board of directors of the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, also heads the West India Fruit & Steamship Co.

James J. Farrell is general manager of the Palm Beach Biltmore. For many years during the summer seasons, he has directed operation of the Monmouth Hotel in Spring Lake, N. J. For past two winters, Farrell managed the Flamingo Hotel in Miami Beach, and prior to that, for many seasons, he directed the Palm Beach Hotel in Palm Beach.

Orlando, Fla.—An information booth is open at the corner of Orange and Central aves. in Orlando. Last year a quarter of a million questions were asked of attendants.

The booth is maintained by the Orlando Transit Co. and Greater Orlando Chamber of Commerce. It is open from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m.

St. Pete Building Fast for Winter Visitors

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.—New winter sunshine homes for visitors have been built by the hundreds here this year. Accommodations for 10,000 people have been constructed in the past 10 months, the greatest building spurt in St. Petersburg's history. These facilities include single-family dwellings, apartments and apartment hotels, beach cottages and motor courts.

All sections of St. Petersburg's land area, 7 miles long, 7 miles broad and almost surrounded by sal water, have benefited from the construction boom. Scores of new shopping centers have taken form throughout the peninsula.

This winter, business and tourist indices are far above last year's high marks. Excitement is in the air in anticipation of early construction of the great trans-bay bridge linking the southern tip of the city with the Florida mainland and the string of resort cities skirting the Tamiami Trail which leads to the Everglades National Park and Miami.

This 20-million-dollar project is the last link in the West Coast highway, U. S. 19, which connects the large cities of the Midwest with Florida west coast resorts.

Derby Lane, world's oldest dog racing track, has been rebuilt at a cost of half a million dollars for the season's opening December 27.

As the Nation's winter baseball capital, St. Petersburg again will be training headquarters of the World Champion New York Yankees and the St. Louis Cardinals and the only city entertaining two major league clubs. Besides their own 8-game spring series, the Yanks and Cards will clash with the other big league teams training in Florida, in daily exhibition games at Al Lang Field.

Jubilee Fete at West Palm

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla.—Plans for a big entertainment program—a variety of events to be staged this winter—have virtually been completed here.

Principal event will be a month long Golden Jubilee Carnival and Fiesta which will start late in December and run until February.

Among jubilee events will be a historical celebration built around the city's development in its first 50 years. The celebration will include a Seminole Indian sun dance, rowing regatta with top crews from the Ivy League, a Shrine circus, a European type auto road race, street dancing and air shows.

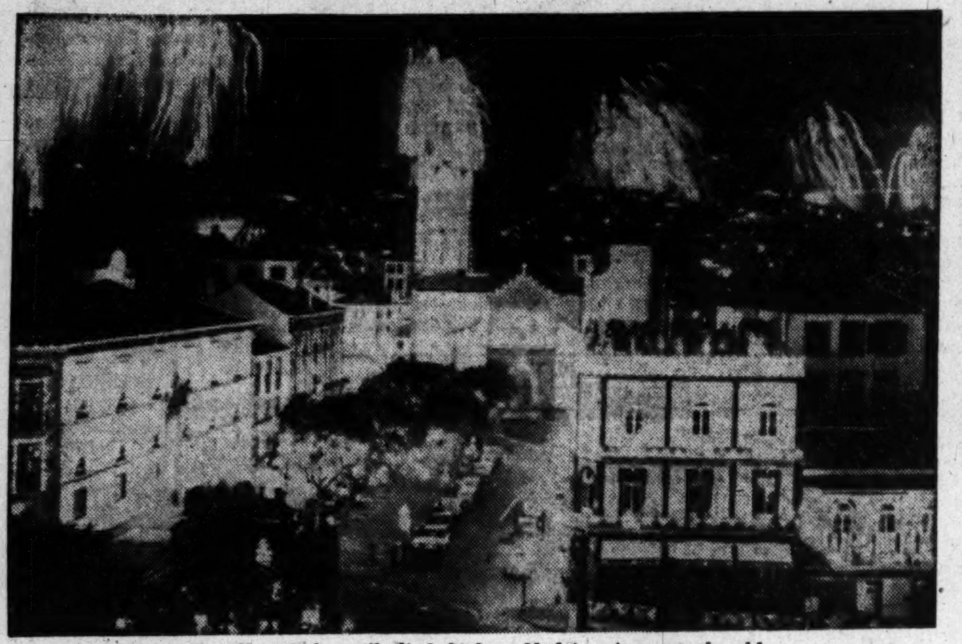
Madeira Gets Lit at Year's End



New Year lights will climb high as Madeira rings out the old

By Dorothea Cruger

THE NEW YEAR will come to the little Portuguese Island of Madeira in a shower of fireworks and colored lights, as it has for so many years past. Funchal, the capital town, will be strung with twinkling lights, while all through the night bursts of fireworks will spray down over the tourist ships anchored in the harbor. At the instant of midnight, a huge illuminated 1949 on the mountain side will give way to 1950.

To thousands of travelers the sight of Madeira on New Year's Eve is a vivid memory. But even greater numbers know the beauty of the island the whole year through. Located off the north African coast near the Azores, this spot combines the lush semitropical beauty of Bermuda with the lofty mountains and sweeping panoramas of Switzerland.

The island is just 32 miles long but in that area are peaks 3600 feet high, giant waterfalls and sheer cliffs dropping down to pebbly coves, as well as the gentler landscape of rolling hills, cultivated in terraces of sugar cane and vineyards. Over all is a profusion of flowers—bougainvillea spilling over villa walls, poinsettia and hydrangea growing wild along mountain roads, nasturtiums abloom in fields of sugar cane.

Discovered in 1419

IN THE cobblestone square in Funchal rises the statue of Joao Goncalves Zarco, who discovered the island in 1419 as he sailed toward Morocco. Zarco's first impression of the prize he claimed for Portugal was of a dense forest, swarming with snakes and mosquitoes, which he called Madeira, the wooded land. Taking the long view, he put a torch to the island, causing a fire which took seven years to burn out but rid Maderia of most insects, and left her with very fertile soil.

Fertile indeed is Madeira today, producing not only bananas, wheat and sugar, but the incomparable Madeira wine, which has carried the name of the island to all parts of the globe. In some places, visitors at vintage time can still see barefoot natives treading on the freshly gathered grape. Or they can watch the women, in little groups under a grape arbor busy making exquisite Madeira embroideries, another famous industry.

Tourism is really the main business of the island, however, with cruise ships, like the Cunard Line's Britannica which sails January 28 from New York, making Funchal a major port of call. As each steamer arrives, tourists are met by throngs of brightly costumed natives, laden with everything from baskets to boots for sale. But it's a good idea to dodge them, and stray down a side street to the open-air market, where clusters of bright flowers and tropical fruits, rich embroideries and colorful wicker baskets are on display, with parakeets in bamboo cages adding their screeches to the clamor of bargaining voices.

Comfortable Hotels

AWAY FROM the market, there are countless excursions to be taken. Long ones, into the mountains where wild blackberries grow, and a hammock supported by two husky men is the means of getting from crag to crag. Or shorter ones, to nearby villages, like Monte, where one can see in a little chapel the tomb of Emperor Carl of Austria, who died in exile in 1922. The return from Monte is by sled, even though there is no snow or ice. Instead, the wicker vehicle glides down at great speed over slippery cobblestones, guided by a grinning native "driver."

For those who succumb to the charms of Madeira and remain several weeks or more, there are comfortable hotels, some with their own swimming pools built right out into the sea, a casino, located in an exotic setting, and the British Country Club. Here a golf course, leading up and down hills through eucalyptus groves, makes for interesting if hazardous, playing.

And everywhere, the visitor for a day or a month will meet pleasant, genuinely friendly people, eager to share their island, and happy to be able to display the sunny charm which has made Madeira the "Pearl of the Atlantic."

Border Traffic Heavier

The volume of highway traffic entering Canada for the first nine months of 1949 was 9 percent heavier than for the same period in 1948, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The greatest proportionate gain was in the Praire Provinces. Automobiles entering Canada on traveler's vehicle permits in one month were up 4 percent over the same month of last year.

Tourists Get a Price Break in Europe

for in 1950, 460,000 more than in 1949. You'll find good hotel accommodations at $2 to $3 daily, a top charge on meals—except at deluxe hotels and restaurants—of five shillings (70 cents) and cheaper rail fares due to devaluation.

In a top-flight London store, considered one of Europe's best, a woman's tailored suit of good British woolens will cost you $48. Last summer it would have been about $65. A Saville Row tailor, whose clothes are world-famed, will make a man's suit for $70, about $30 under the predevaluation price.

British prices are cheaper for foreign visitors and others who take their purchases out of the country within three months. They escape the 30 to 100 percent purchase tax imposed on almost everything.

FRANCE—So far as American tourists are concerned, the French devaluation of the franc was not very important. Before devaluation, tourists received about 330 francs to the dollar on the official free market; now the rate hovers about 350.

France expects at least 2,600,000 tourists in 1950, the same number as in 1949. A good room for two at the best hotel in Soissons, a favorite stopover on the road from Brussels to Paris, is listed at 1200 francs—$3.63 before devaluation, $3.41 after. A good dinner there with wine will cost about the same amount.

Top-flight Paris hotels charge from $5 to $10 daily for room and bath, and the sky is the limit for meal prices in the famed restaurants, but it's possible to dine well for $1.

ITALY—The 1950 Holy Year will be Italy's biggest attraction. The 3,500,000 to four million tourists it is expected to draw will make it Italy's bumper tourist year. The government is campaigning to keep prices at September levels or lower.

Before September 18, the official exchange rate gave 575 lira to the dollar. The current rate, which fluctuates, is 628. A meal in a first-class restaurant costs about $4; in a second-class spot $1.20. A double room in a first-class hotel will cost about $9 daily and about $3.90 in a second-class one.

SWITZERLAND — Prices are high by any standard, and the Swiss franc was not devalued. The Swiss hotel industry has announced that its charges will not be cut to counter the effect of the almost-general European currency value drop.

Rates for a room and three meals in a good Swiss hotel vary from $3.50 to $8.

THE NETHERLANDS, Denmark, Norway and Sweden—tourists traveling with dollars are going to get 30-40 percent more for their money because of the devaluation of the Swedish kroner, the Dutch guilder, the Danish krona and the Norwegian krone. All expect a "somewhat larger number" of American visitors next year, and hotel proprietors are jubilant at the prospect. Sweden has ordered 44 of the largest hotels to give priority to foreign visitors. Food is plentiful and fairly cheap.

The House of Antoine . . .
For over 100 years the House of Antoine has helped spread the fame of its beloved city of New Orleans throughout the world, wherever the "art of good living" is appreciated, amongst the connoisseurs of good things to eat and drink, served in good taste.
During that time a great procession of notables has paid tribute to the House of Antoine. Now in the third generation, the same high standard is maintained.

More Quebec Tourists

All Is Strictly Historical in Williamsburg

both in the generous Virginia tradition.

To be sure, the present tavern is but a mockery — authentic in its woodwork, but false in its very essence since out latter-day Virginia burgesses frown on public dispensing of hot grog. No liquor laws irked the Virginia gentry of an earlier day, and our forefathers, gathering around the fireplace at Chowning's, were permitted to make merry whilst making history. Today, you'll have to be content with light wine, beer, or a non-alcoholic brew — made from the inevitable old Williamsburg recipe—called spiced cider.

All-Year Green

ALTHOUGH Williamsburg is probably at its best in the spring, when its beautiful old trees are sprouting leaves to shade the wide cobbled streets and its famous gardens are in bloom, it should not be eschewed in winter. Those formal, English-style gardens depend heavily on clipped boxwood for effect, and this remains green and full all year round.

Of course, the main attraction at Williamsburg is the famous group of Exhibition Buildings, restored and redecorated authentically (a basic word in the town's vocabulary) by a number of the Rockefeller dimes. For the record, it should be said that these include the Governor's Palace, the Public Gaol, the House of Burgesses, the Wythe house, the Ludwell-Paradise house and two others we forget — having such a lamentable memory for facts. We can tell you, though, that the principal bed George Washington slept in looks hard as a rock.

Southern Sharing 'Yule Gift' With Its Winter Passengers

Nighty night . . . two youngsters in a double bedroom on one of the Southern Railway's new all-room sleeping cars

WASHINGTONIANS traveling to and from points in the South are receiving a major share of an $11,500,000 "Christmas present" that is now being placed into service by the Southern Railway System. The "present" is a fleet of new, lightweight, streamlined passenger cars being added to three of the popular diesel-powered Southern trains serving Washington—the Crescent, the Southerner and the Tennessean.

Onto the Crescent, all-Pullman train operating between New York and New Orleans via Washington, Atlanta and Montgomery, Ala., are going new, all-room sleeping cars of the latest design. These ultra modern cars provide roomettes, double bedrooms, bedroom suites, compartments and drawing rooms, and offer the utmost in travel luxury, convenience, comfort and privacy. They have such features as individual air conditioning and heating controls, comfortable sofas and chairs, full-length mirrors, running ice water, tables for work or play, clothes closet and complete lavatory facilities. A new diner and lounge car are also included in the consist of the trains.

The Southerner, all-reserved-seat coach streamliner, operates through Washington on its run between New York and New Orleans via Atlanta, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala. One of the first streamliners to serve the Nation's Capital, the Southerner is being re-equipped and modernized with the latest in streamlined passenger cars.

The Tennessean, Pullman and coach train operating between Washington and Memphis, Tenn., is being re-equipped with all-room, streamlined sleeping cars and the latest in modern, comfortable, reclining seat coaches.

As the new passenger equipment has been delivered and placed into service, streamlined, all-room sleeping cars have been placed into operation between Washington and such points as Asheville, Winston-Salem and Raleigh, N. C.

A Christmas Present we ordered 3½ years ago!
Excuse our blushes, but our pride is showing. It's a grand and glorious feeling to be headed for the cheery Christmas season with not 1 but 101 bright and shining presents for the Southland.
We're talking, of course, about our 101 new streamlined coaches, all-room Pullmans, diners and lounge cars. They've been going into service almost daily since the first one reached Southern Railway tracks last July.
Nearly all of these cars—ordered more than three years ago—will be in our trains by Christmas. Expensive? The price tag reads $11½ million! But we enjoy playing this kind of Santa Claus for the Southland we serve.

Very Nice Break in Switzerland

By Patricia Scruby

I BROKE an ankle once in Switzerland. It was quite one of the most exciting things that ever happened to me. We were staying at Pontresina in the Engadine. Our bags were packed ready to leave on the afternoon train when we hit the happy thought of going for a final ski.

My brother and I were racing down a slope when I bumped into a post. I was carted off on a toboggan with great ceremony and immediately became a celebrity.

We unpacked our bags, stayed in Pontresina another month. I was very spoiled—large boxes of chocolates and flowers arrived daily. Of course one ankle is still a trifle larger than the other but practically nobody notices it.

Just a Babe

WELL, I was quite a child at the time—and a clumsy one at that—but if you haven't outgrown (and most of us haven't) the little boy and girl fascination for winter sports in a Christmas card world, go look for your warmest woolies, buy a pair of ski pants—but first, read on.

Switzerland has 120 winter resorts. They nestle in valleys, sprout from mountainsides—glowing with happy people. There is nothing quite as exhilarating as Alpine air, as satisfying as skimming over glistening snow, as happy as Swiss music and as beautiful as the way the last rays of the sun make mountain peaks a soft pink before lights flicker through the dusk and the world becomes enchanted.

The Swiss are a nation of hosts. They make their visitors want to return year after year. Hotels and pensions are filled with people, all miraculously able to speak English. In all but the smallest villages there's a ski school, a skating rink with a corner roped off for curling, often a toboggan run and sometimes skijoering. This is quite the most frightening and exciting of sports. Several people hang on to a piece of rope behind a horse and zip through the countryside. If you fall off—too bad.

At nighttime villages and towns echo with the sound of dance music, yodelling and singing. Sometimes there's a fancy dress ball or an ice carnival. There's no time for the dull moment.

Twin Capitals

ST. MORITZ and Davos are perhaps twin capitals of this winter world. St. Moritz with it's terrifying and fascinating bob-sleigh run and ski jump—Davos with the world's largest skating rink. Both have incomparable ski runs. A personally conducted tour is being conducted by the Rutherford travel bureau to these resorts, leaving from New York January 31, returning February 28. KLM airlines will furnish details.

There are so many entirely delightful places in which to spend a holiday it is almost unfair to mention only a few here. The Bernese Oberland is a popular region. Wengen and Murren perch on opposite mountainsides above the Lautterbrunnen valley. Jungfraujoch claims the world's highest hotel. Atop the Jungfrau, it seems almost divorced from the rest of the earth. There is skiing the year round and a skating rink under a glacier.

In the Valais, Zermatt and Crans are charming, Arosa and Flims in the Grison, Andermatt in Central Switzerland.

There are many souvenirs to bring home from a Swiss holiday, a wealth of snapshots and memories, an Alpine suntan—but please, no broken bones.

Nieuw Amsterdam Sails Soon

THE 16-DAY Christmas-New Year cruise of the Holland-American Line flagship Nieuw Amsterdam starts from New York December 18.

Included among the seven West Indies and South American ports in the liner's itinerary will be the three principal shopping centers of the Carribbean—St. Thomas, Curacao and Panama.

These ports feature fine European, Oriental and native merchandise at prices which, especially since devaluation, put a minimum dent in the pocketbook. The recently increased customs allowance, permitting United States citizens and alien residents of the United States who remain outside the country for 12 days or longer to bring back $500 worth of merchandise duty-free, also adds to the pleasure of those whose gift lists are long and who are not hampered by a strict budget.

In addition to visiting St. Thomas, Curacao and Panama, the Nieuw Amsterdam will call at Fort de France, Cartagena, Kingston and Havana—all of which offer distinctive though more limited selections of merchandise to the discriminating buyer.

Rates for the 16-day voyage start at $440.

The Nieuw Amsterdam is scheduled to make two additional cruises of 13 days each to the West Indies and South America, sailing from New York January 6 and January 21, 1950, with rates starting at $360. On Februrary 7, 1950, she will sail on a 50-day luxury cruise around South America, visiting 15 ports in 10 different countries and islands. Rates for this voyage begin at $1490.

Biggest Tourist Year

This has been Saskatchewan's biggest tourist year to date, with nearly 60,000 visitors from the United States and about the same number from other countries and the rest of Canada, provincial authorities have reported. The province's lakes attracted an influx of fishermen.

Its Din Distinguishes Mexico City

modern hotel, we were set to take-in the town.

Cosmopolitan City

MEXICO is a cosmopolitan city of beautiful boulevards. Hotels with smart cocktail lounges and beautiful dining rooms contrast with native markets, where Indian women pound out the tortilla, bread of Mexico. We saw barefoot women in somber rebozas or shawls, with their babies wrapped close to them, treading the busy streets. Indian merchants offer their wares of handmade leather goods, jewelry, etc., on the sidewalks in front of modern department stores, displaying the latest in fashionable merchandise.

In our eagerness to see the city, we did a great deal of our touring on foot. We walked past the flower market with its orchids, gardenias, red carnations, tiny sweetheart roses arranged in tempting displays and all for a few pesos. On the other side of town, we found the funeral display market — where flower wreaths, 8 feet in diameter, worked in gardenias, roses and daisies dyed all colors, sell for 12 pesos, or about $1.50.

Visit to a Shrine

OUR visit to the Shrine of the Virgin of Guadalupe impressed us deeply. Little Indian women, garbed in deep black, actually moved the full length of the beautiful church on their knees.

We visited the pyramids, amazing work of the Aztecs—then on to an old monastery, past part of the 27 miles of aqueduct built by the Spanish to supply water for Mexico, but no longer in use. Later, we hired a car to drive out to Chapultepec Park, which holds the castle of Maximilian and Carlotta, those tragic rulers of Mexico — then on through the lovely residential section. Loma Vista, where palatial residences line the broad avenues.

Well-to-do Mexicans live extremely well. Taxes are negligible, servants plentiful and reasonable—life is generally pleasant in the lovely springlike climate. The main complaint is the devalued peso — which, of course, is hard on the Mexican, but of extreme advantage to the American tourist. On the other side of the picture is the poor Indian, whose home seems to be the street and whose possessions are on his back.

Next our steps lead to the centuries old cathedral, with its beautiful gold altar, then on to the grand palace with its splendid murals, art and industrial exhibits. We had fun bargaining with the street vendors, who followed us for blocks if we dared utter the word "Cuantos," offering us hand-carved lemonwood cigarette boxes for a mere 5 pesos, or about 55 cents, handmade lace mantillas for less than $3. Every evening was a new adventure in eating—with some restaurants in the grand manner of Europe, some typically Mexican, some as American as "Horn and Hardarts."

Visitors marvel when they see a Mexican porter striding down a street with a heavy burden balanced on his back

One experience not on our itinerary was a visit to the national lottery. Everyone—rich or poor—in Mexico buys lottery tickets. The drawings are held in the National Lottery Building — an ultra modern affair—three times each week. The numbers are put into a huge birdcage arrangement, turned with an electric motor, and released one at a time through narrow shoots, where red uniformed page boys pick them up and read them aloud to the table of six judges. A full orchestra and soloists accompany the drawning. Numbers are broadcast over loud speakers to those on the streets. No, we didn't win—even though we did try 5 pesos worth.

The Bull Fight

THE bull fight, too, was on our program. The opening parade of the toreadors, the beautiful senoritas in decorative Spanish costumes, is a splendid sight. The formality before the fight is an interesting story—the rest just judge for yourself when you see one. Our American sense of fairness couldn't appreciate the skill of the fight. We couldn't take it—went on our way early. Apparently, we were in the minority for the some 60,000 fans stayed to cheer to the very last fight.

With time snatching fast at our plans, on a Saturday morning we hired a car for a weekend trip to Taxco.

About one hour and a half from Mexico City, after a drive along excellent roads, we reached Cuernavaca, the summer and weekend resort for residents of the city. First we visited the Borda home, which was the summer residence of Maximillian and Carlotta. The Borda home still bears evidence of the lovely formal gardens, and the tiny artificial lake which most likely served as a moonlight bathing pool for Carlotta and her ladies-in-waiting. The cathedral, the oldest church in America, is impressive with its squat dome and tall tower.

Our guide gave us one hour to shop in Cuernavaca. We did a bit of bargaining for belts and wallets along the main street, then plied our way to the market. Here we found every service available—a haircut for 5 cents if you face the wall—10 cents if you face the market crowd; pottery, baskets, cheese, meats, flowers, candles and gaudy-hued candy in big chunks. As noon struck, we hurried back to the waiting car to arrive at Taxco in time for luncheon.

Silver Center

TAXCO we knew to be a mining village founded in 1520s when the Spanish discovered silver in its hills. Taxco was our spot for silver shopping, we knew, but we were totally unprepared for the view which met our eyes as our car took the last bend in the highway. Little whitewashed adobe houses with bright red roofs seem to clamber one after another up the series of steep inclines. Winding narrow tiny cobblestone streets, just wide enough for one auto, cut through the town at odd angles, to make driving a real hazard.

The streets surrounding the village square we found to our deilght were bordered with silver shops, each with its own special exquisite wares. We saw silver jewelry handmade, bought our share of the lovely trinkets, tramped the slippery smooth stone streets until weary and thirsty we stopped at a native stand for refreshment. A little Mexican lad loaded with native baskets tried a little bargaining with us. In our limited Spanish, we said 3 pesos "too much." He astounded us with a reply in English, "Senor, it's only 38 cents in American money." Yes, he learned English from the tourists—could speak it fluently, but could neither read or write it.

Sunday morning early—cocks crowing, donkeys braying, church bells ringing, we were up to see the sunrise from our balcony room. Soon we were on our way to mass in the famous church of San Sebastian and Santa Prisca, which was built by Joseph Laborde for his son. The church was packed to capacity—even the dogs go to church in Taxco. Taxco is lovely at any time, but early Sunday morning, awakening from a busy Saturday, it seems to have all the atmosphere of a dreamtown.

Back to Town

WE PILED back into the car for the return trip to Mexico in time for some visiting to personal acquaintances, who were nice enough to invite us to their lovely Mexican home, and to give us a picture of living in Mexico which made us want to anchor ourselves for a long time.

With another day to spare, we decided to take that time for a trip to Puebla, just about three hours from Mexico City. The day was beautifully clear for snapshots, and not one of us had a camera to record snow-capped Popo and Sleeping Lady.

Puebla is a very clean, busy city noted for its gay Majolica pottery. We were delighted with the town and its wares, bought just a few small items because flying luggage must necessarily be light, then went on to see the secret convent of Santa Monica, which went underground in the nineteenth century, when Mexico did away with all religious institutions, and was not discovered until 1935. It is now a government museum.

We hope to go back to Mexico sometime soon. We want to see all we missed on our short trip. We never did get to the town that paints its dogs in bright hues with harmless dyes—nor into the tropical areas where orchids grow wild—nor to beautiful Acapulco on the Pacific. If only to enjoy again the same experiences of this trip, we would want to return to Mexico. Its lure is impelling for all the tourist booklets, and tales of those whose have been there cannot begin to paint pictures of the pleasures Mexico offers, regardless of vacation tastes.

Sopac Increasing Service

P. R. CONAGHAN, general agent here for the Southern Pacific Co., announced yesterday that South Pacific will increase its passenger service for the winter season between Chicago and the Phoenix-Tucson "sun country."

Starting December 15 from Chicago, additional cars will be carried on both the extra-fast, streamlined "Golden State" and the "Imperial," heading for southern Arizona and the Southwest.

Travelers going to the Southwest via New Orleans and her Mardi Gras will find that Southern Pacific's "Sunset Limited" has been completely dieselized and is now faster than before. This is the first step in completely streamlining the crack train and putting it on a 42-hour schedule between New Orleans and Los Angeles next summer, Conaghan said.

"No Vacancy" signs, which have plagued tourists for the past 10 years, are becoming a thing of the past. And Tucson real estate men report rent levels about 10 percent lower this year than last.

New resorts and guest ranches have sprung up and older establishments have expanded and improved their facilities to give vacationers horseback riding, golfing, tennis, swimming, hiking, picnicking, square dances and barbecues.

Conaghan added that anyone planning on a winter's sun in the Southwest might find good use for Southern Pacific's booklet. "List of Resorts and Guest Ranches," that describes over 200 resorts, guest and "dude" ranches, resort hotels, and ranch schools, giving their accommodations, rates, facilities and recreational activities. Also, it tells whom to write to for reservations, which should, of course, be made in advance.

You Don't Have to Know French

By Julia N. Easley

MUCH publicity has been given at various times to college men and women who spend their junior year in France. And the plan, whether under the direction of Sweet Briar, Smith, Bennington or another college, opens fascinating vistas to aspirants to such groups, as well as to actual participants.

These vistas may open to one who has knowledge of French beyond polite phrases. Such I found to be true when I, a complete stranger, arrived in Paris one October day.

Phrasebook in hand, I made my way from the Gare de Lyon across the city to my hotel, where I found my previously unconfirmed request for a three-day reservation had been accepted. There was also a telephone message for me from the four Sweet Briar College girls taking their "Junior Year in France" under the Sweet Briar plan. These four were the only persons in Paris whom I as a Sweet Briar graduate of a few months' standing knew well, and I had written the week before telling them of my pending arrival.

Their call was to welcome me to Paris with an invitation to join them at tea that afternoon. Allowing time for me to rest and settle after a night train from Genoa, they came by my hotel at 5 and escorted me to a small cafe nearby.

Introduction to Paris

OVER the teacups my friends informed me that, although for my visit I had chosen the weekend climaxing their first six weeks when they were taking their placement tests for the Sorbonne, they had many plans. The only condition was that I must amuse myself during the early part of the following day while they were at their exams.

To this I agreed, and there began a delightful introduction to Paris. I was presented with bus tickets and directed to certain things I could see by myself the next day. My time had been completely and well organized.

Not only had the Sweet Briar girls planned for me to see in less than three full days most of the sights the average tourist meets including dinner on the Tour Eiffel and the Ballet de Monte Carlo, but also there was the personal touch of seeing Reid Hall, academic rooms and home for many many American women students, of meeting a few of the other 73 Sweet Briar plan students from 33 different colleges and universities, and best of all of meeting and dining with the charming French family in whose home three of the Sweet Briar girls have been placed for the year.

Much Too Brief

I CONSIDER my stay in Paris, although too brief, well-rounded for the time allowed, this entirely due to the planning of my student friends who already had six weeks' acquaintance with the country.

It was wonderful for me to have such a contact in France, and several times my friends expressed the feeling that they were delighted to see "people from home." For these reasons I recommend to others that they also, when in Paris, take the opportunity for mutual benefit to see friends who are studying there.

West Point Gives Some Students a Unification Lesson

By Fred M. Hechinger

WEST POINT, N. Y.—If a country can be judged by its institutions, then the United States may happily point to its Military Academy. When—last week—West Point invited more than 100 students from 53 civilian colleges and universities (and from the United States Naval Academy),* quite a few expected that opinions there would parade as rigidly as the cadets on review.

The visitors were quick to admit that they had been wrong. The first conference "on United States affairs" was as open-minded as any meeting ever held under the auspices of academic freedom. Its purpose, as stated by Col. Herman Beukema, head of the social science department, was "to broaden cadets' contact with their collegiate contemporaries in an academic endeavor, and to produce an orderly, informative examination and discussion of United States foreign policy."

The representation was broad enough to range alphabetically from Amherst College to Yale University. And a 147-year tradition was broken when the alphabetical gamut included women's colleges from Barnard to Wellesley.

Tough Assignment

TO work out a blueprint of United States foreign policy toward Europe for 10 years to come—the specific conference assignment—is so tough a job that it might easily lose itself in starry-eyed ideals and impractical visions. It seems, therefore, a hopeful testimony of the growing maturity of the young generation of intellectual leaders—civilian as well as military—that every debate dealt with realities rather than with wishful thoughts.

While there was happily not a single voice raised in support of an inevitable or a preventive war, the majority opinion stood behind a firm and healthy peace rather than ostrich-like pacifism.

In order to keep plans grounded in facts, West Point furnished a group of advisory experts. In opening talks the objectives were outlined by Admiral Arthur C. Davis, chief of the Joint Staff; Paul Hoffman, ECA administrator, and Dr. Grayson Kirk, provost of Columbia University and director of the Academy of Political Science. Conference assistants included: Prof. Frederick Dunn of Yale University, Col. R. J. Wood of the National War College, Dr. George Milliken of the Congressional Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. Francis Wilcox, chief of staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; Dr. Leo Pasvolsky of the Brookings Institution, and James Reston of the New York Times.

Spirit Important

BUT MORE important than headliners and personalities was the spirit of the group. One panel refused to adjourn until, in the early hours of the morning, it found a soul-searching formula which would recommend European economic integration without danger of American interference or coercion. It is good to hear a democratic foreign policy defended by our future military leaders, and Cadet Albert L. Romaneski warned: "We must not assume the right to force Europe to do what we order or to adopt certain political measures as a result of our interference. We must not expect such action by our European friends as an obligation of gratitude for our aid."

Gratifying, too, was the overwhelming support voted for the United Nations, for continued American aid to the European economy, for the freedom of other countries to choose their form of government within the framework of human rights and basic freedoms, and for definite security measures to prevent the resurgence of German militarism.

Perhaps most interesting was the session in which, after debate with an insistent minority, cooperation with Franco Spain was turned down at the advice of the military experts.

Basic Point

BUT even these concrete achievements are overshadowed by something more basic. On the second day, for instance, Col. T. L. Crystal (West Point '34) turned over his chairmanship of the economic panel to junior Susanne Hoeber of Sarah Lawrence, and the civilians, cadets and midshipmen continued in willing unity under this unusual but effective female command.

One drafting committee (merely typical of the others) consisted of three civilian students, two cadets and one midshipman. One panel, at the request of a midshipman, asked to be represented by one of the Negro cadets who, incidentally and despite a considerable Southern cadet enrollment, are living proof that "non-separate and equal" can be democratic reality.

The students were frankly surprised. "I was amazed that the cadets, despite their military specialization, are as up to date on the social sciences as we civilians," said Paul E. Sigmund, jr., of Georgetown University. "This is supposedly an engineering school, but the cadets learn more of the humanities than engineering undergraduates ever do."

Railroad Painting Results in a Fine Mystery

WHEN Hernando G. Villa, Los Angeles artist and authority on Indian lore, created his painting "The Chiefs" for Santa Fe Railway's 1950 calendar, neither he nor the railroad dreamed it would result in a first-class mystery.

But it did.

Shortly after the railroad began distributing the calendar, which shows an Indian chief riding a white horse and waving to a passing streamliner, the company's offices were deluged with calls from the public asking for an explanation of two red hand prints on the horse's chest.

Nobody on the railroad knew the answer to the "mystery of the red hands," and as the calls continued to increase, the company appealed to Villa for assistance.

His explanation: The Araphoe Indian warrior dips his hand into a special dye and puts a hand print on his horse to indicate the horse is a veteran of battle.

You might call it the Indian version of the "Campaign Ribbon."

Low-Cost Air Plan Studied

ALL AMERICAN AIRWAYS has proposed a new travel plan to the Civil Aeronautics Board which it says will provide this community with the lowest air fares ever offered in the East.

Designed to promote air travel in the Middle Atlantic area, All American's plan would reduce return fares 75 percent on round-trip flights between intermediate points and terminal cities on the company's system where there is no competitive air service.

The reduced fare plan provides for round trips which are to be completed within a period not to exceed two days and will be available on all the company's scheduled flights. Pending CAB action, the new fares will become effective December 15.

For example: The regular round-trip fare between Williamsport, Pa., and New York is $20.10 plus tax. Under the new plan, an air patron in that community will be able to fly to New York and return for only $13.20 plus tax, providing the complete trip does not require more than two days.

D. C. Women's Team Ties for Coffin Cup

By Marian H. Barre

NOW ON the ninth, and last day of play, the twenty-third annual National Tournament, held in Philadelphia at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, brought a series of triumphs for Capitalites attending, chief of which was the tied win of the women's team title by Mrs. Edward Cotter, Mrs. Marianne Boschan, Miss Kathleen McNutt, and Mrs. Frederick Eberson, all of this city except Mrs. Eberson, a former localite, who now lives in Memphis, Tenn. Our gals tied with a Philadelphia quartet.

The trophy is the Charles E. Coffin Cup, which was last won by a local lineup in 1937. "Red point" awards for the title should be sufficient to earn the "life master" rating for Mrs. Boschan, Mrs. Cotter, and Miss McNutt, all of whom were high-ranking senior masters. Mrs. Eberson became a "lifer" several years ago while a resident of Washington.

An auspicious start in the tourney was made by James C. Stone and Miller Roberts when they led their section of the Hospitality Pair Game on the opening night. They were fifth in the over-all. Three of the 4½ points needed by Roberts for his LM degree were awarded for this position. Miss McNutt and C. C. Lovenberg captured a section runner-up position.

In the National Individual championship, Simon Gerber, Arlington, finished third, one up to Vic Zeve, of this city, with 372 players competing. It was the largest unit-field in any national tournament, awards going far down the line. Even seventeenth position in which Miss McNutt finished may pay off.

Dr. and Mrs. Steinberg won the single-session Monday game; Boschan-McNutt had a section top in A. S. Bunday pairs; C. C. Johnson and John Parish were fourth in the field, second in their section, in the Sunday game. Carl Siewicki also had a section win in addition to qualifying for the finals in the world master mixed pair championship, which was a Waterloo for local duos. The only others that survived were Mrs. R. H. Skinner and Leroy Thurtell, and Miller Roberts paired with Mrs. Agatha Tiernan of Pittsburgh.

WITH four games to go before the conclusion of the first half of the Washington Bridge League's current season, the following members are leading their respective classifications:

In group "A"—Mrs. W. M. McIntyre, .5954; Mrs. J. R. McGhee, .5827; Dr. Steinberg, .5815. Group "B"—Vic Zeve, .5772; John Luttrell, .5752; Gary Arisian, .5721. In the "C" group Albert White tops the list with .5712; Mrs. James Adler, .5616; Dr. LeRoy Robins, .5526. The averages are based on the best 8 out of 13 games, the match of December 7 not being included. Winners that night were Mrs. Mary Goodstein and H. A. Mayer, J. Overend and R. B. Hannings in Section 1, the last-named pair having the largest lead in all sections. Section 2, Mrs. Marian H. Barre, E. R. Shepard, Miss Laura Hunter, S. Berman. Section 3, M. Michaels, Richard Freeman, Mrs. Edna Evans and Mr. Benshimol.

ANYBODY who questions the players' response to the Christmas spirit should go to Hotel Roosevelt Wednesday evening when the Washington Bridge League conducts its Winners Game. Don't be amazed if you see a Life Master toting a teddy bear. Don't think those gaily-wrapped packages are the prizes. The whole flock of them go to Children's Hospital. It's an annual custom inaugurated by the Women's Auxiliary. Each player brings a toy as part of his entry fee. If the toys are wrapped the contents should be written on the package to facilitate distribution. A committee appointed by Mrs. H. G. Campbell, president of the auxiliary, will play Santa Claus.

Vicki Cummings . . . appears in "Strange Rebound" tomorrow at 8 p. m. on Silver Theater over WOIC

Revision of Chinese Listings Carried in Scott Catalogue

By William M. Stuart

VOLUME II of Scott's 1950 Standard Postage Stamp Catalogue has just been published. The most important part of the catalogue is the complete revision of Chinese listings, according to Gordon Harmer, president of Scott Publications. The China Stamp Society is responsible for all changes in China, and this revision, without doubt, will prove advantageous to all collectors of Chinese stamps.

STUART

More than 1000 numbers have been changed and 23 new stamps added. Extensive price changes are noted throughout the volume. Early Swiss issues have been expanded and the cantonal issues have been rearranged chronologically. Korea, which has been under the C's since 1885, is now in its correct place, the "K" sector. For the first time, stamps of Ifni, the Spanish territory in northern Morocco, have been accorded Scott listing. There are 32 ordinary stamps, 39 airmails and 1 special delivery in this new country. Israel is also a new name in the volume.

A Serbian set has been deleted —Nos. 140-153. This is the Corfu issue of 1918 with "overprint" POSTES SERBS on stamps of France, now known to be a cancellation. In Spanish western Sahara, 26 ordinary stamps, 8 airmails and a special delivery are listed for the first time.

THE Post Office Department advises patrons that printed unsealed Christmas greetings require 2-cent postage this year; 1½-cent stamps are "out."

Effective December 20, air-mail service will be inaugurated over segment No. 1 on route A M-90, between Omaha, Nebr.; Council Bluffs, Iowa; Lincoln, Beatrice, Fairbury, Hastings, Grand Island, Kearney, Lexington, McCook and North Platte, Nebr. Special cachets will be provided. No provision will be made for point-to-point covers.

The 3-cent commemorative honoring the American Bankers Association on its seventy-fifth anniversary, to be released at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., on January 3.

THE Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at the home of Ray Smith, 4635 N. 16th st., Arlington, Va. Secretary C. C. Fisher has arranged an interesting program.

J. H. Weimer will hold his fourteenth precancel auction at 3150 16th st. nw., bids closing December 29. There are 1410 lots listed.

An auction was held at the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, A. G. Galloway presiding. Ellery Denison acted as auctioneer. A donation auction will be held January 3 and a "$2 auction" January 17. The committee requests donations as soon as possible. Another meeting will be held Tuesday evening in the Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The Friendship Stamp Club met Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Pearl R. Colecchia, 3734 Brandywine st. nw., with Bert C. Gardner, president of the Public Buildings Administration Stamp Club, as speaker. At the meeting on December 21 at the Eldbrooke Church, officers will be elected.

The Capital City Post Card Club will meet Monday evening at 5929 4th st. nw.

Theater Consults the Crystal Ball

By Richard L. Coe

PREPARATORY to a theater conference here next spring which will attract personalities from all over the country, a regional meeting was held last weekend at the University of Delaware.

All phases of the theater in the Middle Atlantic States were represented—professional, community, school and college groups attending.

What was discussed? As in all such get-togethers—everything.

Was anything accomplished?

Yes. Technical means of procedure for the Washington meeting were voted upon and there was some indication that the professional theater is alive to the value of community and school theaters.

As Clarence Derwent, president of Actors' Equity Association, put it: "The professional theater is increasingly alive to the fact that its audiences of the future must be thought of now. This has been a very bad period for the professional actors and it is immensely important for their future that theater in all its levels be made a habit of potential playgoers. For that selfish reason, we professionals are decidedly interested to learn what school and community theaters are doing. It is good to see here representatives of the children's theater movement, for the habit of theatergoing should be formed in childhood."

Area Well Represented

WASHINGTON was widely represented in this group, largely from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland and Delaware.

Representing Catholic University and the collegiate field was Joan Lee Walsh, who's been active with the department's graduate touring group as well as with many past productions. Mrs. Walsh pointed to the importance of the playwright and the difficulties with which his evolution is beset.

The Fairlington Players' Mrs. F. Dean Evans viewed the proceedings from the viewpoint of community theater. The Fairlington group, though new, has been an extremely lively group in this area and its value to the professional theater in forming audiences is evident. Mrs. Evans reports that her group has the bright idea of presenting worthwhile plays which, for some reason or another, had only brief New York runs and which seems to merit further representation.

Ben O'Brien, director of recreation for the Veterans Administration, took the viewpoint that talk of decentralizing the theater is, perhaps, inaccurate. Integregated working together of all branches of the entertainment field seemed to him desirable.

Sidwell Outstanding

PROGRAMS of the first morning were devoted to secondary and children's schools, with visitors from Washington's Sidwell Friends School copping top spots in two unique tournaments.

With Mabel Wright, for many years director of the Wilmington High School Theater, as director, a cast was chosen during the morning to present a scene from Maxwell Anderson's "Mary of Scotland." This was acted, with able effect, at that evening's meeting.

The title role was acted by Joanne Gilbert, of Sidwell Friends, whose poise and quiet mastery of the part brought her unanimous admiration. Another Sidwell girl, Danielle Luzzatto, had one of the supporting parts.

The Sidwell Friends group also won first place in a recorded contest with other school groups, all doing a scene from "The Importance of Being Earnest." The Misses Gilbert and Luzzatto were joined in this by Elizabeth Kelsey and Jean Ryland. Their dramatics coach, Miss Barbara Dirks, was on hand for their triumph.

Professional Theater

PAUL BRUCE PETTIT, theater director at the New York State College for Teachers, described the remarkable success of the small professional theater at Albany, which has presented its subscribers with over 50 plays during the past four years with a profit accruing that is rapidly whittling down the initial $200,000 it cost to build the plant. Dr. Pettit's description of how these professional, Equity players have made a regional theater pay was remarkably encouraging, though it's something of a shock to admit that J. Hartley Manners' old hit, "Peg o' My Heart," is Albany's top grosser.

Kelly Yeaton, director of the Pennsylvania Dramatic Association, told how another professional company had taken root in a town of less than 40,000 populations, but had paid its way on the subscription plan.

William Miles, operator of the Stockbridge (Mass.) summer theater, suggested that the trails blazed by the Barter, Webster and Catholic University groups might well be followed by the packaged summer shows which visit such places as our Olney. He suggested that similar ventures could travel by bus and truck during the winter, playing in community theaters, rather than in the accepted traditional theaters of the road.

What would the unions think of this procedure to cut costs? Equity's Derwent decided he didn't even hear the idea. The question it posed was, well, fundamental.

Karloff Likes to Scare People

By Sonia Stein

Boris Karloff having himself a wonderful time. Shown here acting to his heart's content with Mildred Natwick on ABC-TV's "Starring Boris Karloff," the one-time movie monster loves television

TELEVISION producers turn pale, actors scream, technicians can't credit their ears—when Boris Karloff says, "I look forward to Thursday." In all his years as a horror man, Karloff never raised such a shudder in his audience as he does when he says, with a gentle smile, "I look forward to Thursday."

For the past 12 Thursdays Karloff has been doing a television show on Thursday nights ("Starring Boris Karloff," WMAL-TV, ABC, 9 p. m.) and he has "loved every minute of it." Other actors, suffering the pangs of adapting to a new medium, coping with technical limitations, learning lines, fighting the frenzy that traditionally surrounds a dramatic TV show, look at Karloff and shiver. "You must like to torture yourself," they say.

But Karloff, who is gentle as a kitten and whimsical as Sir James Barrie, for all his sinister reputation, is having himself a huge, healthy lark. (Said lark runs through this Thursday night and then suspends while Karloff takes a vacation which he seems neither to need nor want, and resumes whenever ABC gets a sponsor for the show, which cannot be too far off. The show deserves one, and furthermore, somebody must get Karloff back to his happy task so we can all "look forward to Thursday.")

Big, Brown Eyes

IT WAS easy to track down the man who earned his widest fame playing the Frankenstein monster in the movies. Through dark deserted corridors in ABC's huge studio building in New York, which once housed a riding academy, past the moldy, dusty, broken props used on the eerie mystery shows that have been produced in the Karloff series, up a stairway, around a corner and suddenly!—there you are, face to face with a delightful man with big, benign brown eyes sitting peacefully in a well-lighted office smiling happily over his good fortune to be on television.

"Television has tremendous charm," he explains. "It requires a continued, sustained effort like a play . . . In that half hour you are absolutely on your own. Nobody can help you. There are eight million eavesdroppers but you are alone in the world for half an hour."

Even though film actors try not to fluff and kill time with retakes, Karloff claims movie making doesn't have that "subtle pleasure of 'this is it,'" that gives TV such excitement.

With television you have to be ready on cue. "The clock is ticking and there's no stopping it. If your head falls off at five minutes to nine you have to find a way to screw it back on. It's a hideous kind of excitement, a terrific stimulus," says Karloff in a perfect delirium of enthusiasm.

Credits Director

MOST of his joy in this series he credits to the director, ALEX SEGAL. ("Write that name in capital letters," orders Karloff, and I did.) Karloff goes on: "I can't say enough about him. He knows the medium inside and out, has everything prepared for us before the first rehearsal. Actors who've never worked with him before and are used to the frightful, frantic business common on other shows say, 'This is like dying and going to Heaven.' Alex does everything. I think he sweeps up after we go home." (Segal, incidentally, directed the prize-winning "Actor's Studio" last year.)

The big satisfaction in any TV dramatic series is the "chance to flex your muscles," according to Karloff. Like the newest recruit to the art of Thespis, 62-year-old Karloff is having himself a high old time because "In 13 weeks I have a chance to play 13 different parts. I'd wait 10 years for that in Hollywood."

And indeed, in his many years in Hollywood he was usually type cast as a monster of one sort or another in such spooky epics as "The Old Dark House," "The Mummy," and "The Isle of the Dead." He played the Frankenstein thing three times before he rebelled, feeling "the dramatic possibilities of the monster were exhausted.

"After that they got somebody else to play it. I got the fan mail and the other fellow got the checks," he remarked ruefully. (Under four solid hours of Hollywood makeup, nobody but the payroll department knew it wasn't the original monster.)

Always Working

WHILE Karloff has stuck to "exciting, offbeat stories" for the series—"I don't think the public ever wants me to play Little Lord Fauntleroy"—he has given himself wide scope of character within the suspenseful stories.

"An actor should be constantly working at his trade," says Karloff with conviction. "I must have developed myself as an actor during this series," he points out. This is the great contribution TV will make to the acting world, Karloff feels, offering the rapid and exacting training to an actor that theatrical stock companies once did.

Karloff, who played stock, with its changing repertoire for many years, admits that you must "have a quick study" to learn the lines. "Having a quick study is like having big feet or small feet. You have it or you don't," he explains. For his TV show, he starts to study his part at 1 a. m. Sunday morning, works 2½ hours. "The lines are still there in the shower Sunday morning." After a quick run-through Sunday night with Mrs. Karloff, he's got his lines learned.

His Two Heads

KARLOFF'S radio show which has run on ABC (WMAL, Wednesdays, 9 p. m.) concurrently with the TV series, never confused him, although he used scripts for that which were almost—but not quite—identical to the TV scripts. "I'd cut that show on a record Saturday morning and then go to the television rehearsal in the afternoon. I'd just leave the radio head behind and bring the television head with me," he remarked calmly.

Karloff feels that an actor has to be "stage-struck" to be happy. "If you haven't got a fire in your belly" for that kind of work, you shouldn't be in it, he says. And Karloff, who has had a fire in his for more than 40 years, certainly seems to have found television as good as high octane gasoline for making the flames roar.

WTOP Double-Checks on Postman Today

DOES the postman always ring twice? WTOP, in the first of its new series of Sunday "actuality" broadcasts this afternoon at 2:30, hopes to answer such questions about the crew of men in gray who are deterred not by sleet and rain.

As a complement to the CBS network documentary broadcasts, "You Are There," in which a historical episode is recreated on the fourth Sunday of every month (2:30 p. m., WTOP), the station is planning the "actuality" series for the second Sunday of every month.

The difference between documentary and actuality seems to be this: in a documentary, actors re-create an actual and reasonably historical incident; in an actuality broadcast, real people portray themselves doing whatever they are doing at the time. The actuality is just an aural photograph, while the documentary is a drama.

Later shows in the series, which is to be conducted by WTOP Newsman Bob Nichols, will include a peek at Washington society, the traffic situation and other phenomena of the Potomac scene. The show is titled "Potomac Panorama."

Now About That Seating Plan . . .

By Paul Hume

TWO weeks ago we discussed the ways in which symphony orchestras are seated on stage.

It was not our intention to refer to the matter further. However, last Sunday another music page stated, "It has been misrepresented by a local publication perhaps through ignorance . . ."

Allow us therefore to quote our sources and prove our facts. The particular question at issue is the way in which the late Frederick Stock seated the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Simple and Clear

IN A letter dated November 15, 1949, George Kuyper, manager of that orchestra, says, "I am happy to enclose the seating diagram of the orchestra used by Dr. Frederick Stock."

The printed diagram he sent is simple and clear. On the conductor's left are shown first violins, and violas. On his right stand the second violins, with the cellos in front of, and slightly to the right.

The names of players Evans and Powers, which our colleague states were on Stock's right, are clearly on his left. These men are viola and cello players, respectively. Weicher and Essers, leaders of the first and second violins, sit—not on the conductor's left, as claimed—but facing each other across the conductor's stand.

This is the way we had remembered the Chicago Symphony to which we listened from 1922 until 1941. But it is not safe to trust such details to memory.

Unjust Comparison

WE appreciate direct confirmation from Chicago of our position in the matter. But we repeat what we said last week: the seating of an orchestra does not make or break its tone.

It is unjust to compare the tone of the National Symphony to that of the Philadelphia or Boston strings when those orchestras carry ten more string players than the Washington Symphony. But we must also point out that the National Symphony strings have, on numerous occasions, played with clarity and brilliance equal to the Philadelphia strings.

And now, as far as we are concerned, the matter of seating the orchestra is closed.

Eddie Gallaher ON RECORDS

MARTA—Tony Martin, RCA Victor: In the days of radio's lusty infancy, many a housewife was wont to look forward to a pause in the day's occupation when she would lean on her mop handle, gaze dreamily into space, and sigh for a few minutes over a romantic voice which issued from her loudspeaker. Like a troubador of old, this young man sang to the strains of an accordion and called himself "The Street Singer." Probably many of his listeners entertained wild visions of escaping from the humdrum world of housework to run away with this amorous vagabond; and actually the guy wouldn't have made such a bad catch at that. Because today the Street Singer himself, Arthur Tracy, has abandoned the ways of a wandering minstrel, and is now a conservative businessman right here in Washington.

As the Street Singer, Arthur Tracy had a penchant for rolling his r's while intoning a song, in the style of his more conservative indoor contemporaries of the concert world, and his tongue would get quite a work-out as it rolled lovingly over the syllables of his theme song, "Mar-r-rta, r-r-rambling r-r-rose of the wildwood."

Although the Street Singer is no longer r-r-rambling these days, Marta herself has just taken a new lease on life, thanks to a spanking fine performance by Tony Martin on a current RCA Victor release. Martin is top man among the tenors these days, a status which earns him a fine income from theater and night club appearances. But being a top tenor is a fairly thankless position in the record field, where the low baritones . . . the Crosbys, Monroes and Haymeses . . . enjoy the greatest fame. This situation should trouble Martin not a whit, however. Such records of his as "Marta" and "There's No Tomorrow" are peerless products, indeed, and should eventually win Martin his place in the sun. Meanwhile, although the barnyard baritones rule the roost these days, let it at least be said that Tony Martin isn't laying any eggs.

THE OLD MASTER PAINTER—Dick Haymes, Decca: Two of the most unusual song hits of the season have been "Riders in the Sky" and "That Lucky Old Sun." Now comes a song by the composers of "That Lucky Old Sun," written in the style of "Riders in the Sky." "The Old Master Painter" bears the same spiritual quality; the same Western flavor, and the same spirited tempo of its ghost-riding predecessor.

FROM A DISK JOCKEY'S MEMO PAD: "There's a Bluebird on Your Windowsill," particularly as recorded by Doris Day (Columbia), receives this column's highest recommendation. Not only is it a catchy tune, but the composer, a nurse at the Children's Hospital, Westminster, British Columbia, is donating her royalties for the benefit of the crippled children at the hospital . . . "Don't Cry, Joe" was actually written by a fellow named Joe, although he is quick to point out that the lachrymose male of the lyrics is not himself. The writer in question, Joe Marsala, actually has little cause for crying, as he has at last written a hit, his first since "Little Sir Echo" of many years ago . . . Concert singers generally sound a bit out of place, if not downright condescending, when they grapple with a popular song. Nelson Eddy's singing of "Mule Train" bears a strong vocal resemblance to the mule itself.

The Music Box

A Busy Week In Store for Concertgoers

WHAT a week!

Opera at Constitution Hall tomorrow night, a Francescatti-Casadesus recital in the Library of Congress, and George Szell, guest-conducting the National Symphony.

Plus Mariemma and her Spanish dancers Tuesday, the churches rolling in Christmas music, and unusual programs by Ina Holtzscheiter, Lewis Atwater and John Yard, and Howard University's choral concerts through the week.

Norman Dello Joio's coming to town tonight also. The rising young composer will play the piano for his Capriccio and Variation on Yfrah Neaman's recital in the National Gallery.

Harry McClure sets forth another amazing piano program Tuesday night. On Wednesday the Washington Club will hold a recital of great music for voice and lute or guitar. Shura Dvorine has some interesting novelties for Thursday evening. Saturday night the Agriculture Choristers, under Richard Dirksen have a knockout program in store.

SUNDAY morning Florence Booker's Washington-Lee High School Choir will sing at the First Baptist Church service at 11:15. The Utah Centennial Chorus sings Monday evening at the Woodrow Wilson PTA, Thursday in a program at McKinley High, and Saturday again in their own church, the Washington LDS chapel.

Roger Pries plays at 4 today in his father's studio. Last week we ran his picture with the caption, "Jack Reeder plays today at 4." Well—we're sorry. Jack played last week, all right and Roger plays today.

Washington Alumnae of Sigma Alpha Iota will hold a Founders' Day banquet tomorrow evening at 6:45 in the Ivy Terrace Tea Room. A week from tonight, Sunday, December 18, the Budapest Quartet will play the annual Stradivarius concert in the Library of Congress. Three Beethoven quartets.

THE National Symphony Orchestra and the Washington School of the Ballet are presenting a ballet version of Hansel and Gretel. Monday afternoon, January 2, at 3 o'clock, in Constitution Hall the music and dancing will be presented in the manner of the English pantomime.

The only Constitution Hall performance of the Messiah this year is the great reading now being prepared by Paul Callaway and the combined Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies.

Art Auction To Be Held

MORE THAN 30 Washington painters and sculptors have contributed works to be auctioned for the benefit of the building fund of the Workshop Center of the Arts, which will be held at the United Nations Club, 1701 19th st. nw., next Thursday evening, at 8. The sponsoring committee includes Frank Jelleff, Mrs. Hugo Black, Charles Seymour, jr., Herman Williams and Lawrence Gichner.

Paintings and sculptures to be sold at the auction may be seen in advance at the workshop from Monday through Wednesday evening between 7 and 9 o'clock.

Lithographs and silk screen prints by Ruth Starr Rose will be shown at the United Nations Club, 1701 19th st. nw., beginning Tuesday afternoon.

Beginning Thursday at the Watkins Gallery at American University will be a two-week showing of drawings by the Italian artist, Corrado Cagli. While this is his first exhibit in Washington, Cagli's drawings have appeared here with poems by Charles Olson in a publication of the Black Sun Press.

The Georgetown Studio Gallery at 2700 Q st. nw. announces an exhibition and auction today from 2 to 5 p. m. The auction will begin promptly at 4.

Two New Shows Opening Here

By Jane Watson Crane

EXHIBITIONS by foreign artists, whose work has never before been shown in Washington, and a group display by the District's oldest artists' organization are added to the roster of local shows this weekend. Opening this afternoon at the Phillips Gallery are special exhibitions of paintings by the French artist, Jacques Villon, and the German-American, Lyonel Feininger. Although Villon had a highly successful show in New York last season, this is his first in the District. Feininger is a well-known water colorist and printmaker with a long record of achievement behind him.

The Society of Washington Artists has launched its fifty-eighth annual in the National Collection of Fine Arts at the Smithsonian. Judges for the group this year were Adelyn Breeskin, director of the Baltimore Museum of Art, and Reuben Kramer, Baltimore sculptor.

THE Arts Club is giving Angela Trindade, a professional painter from India, her first exhibit in the United States. Miss Trindade paints portraits and landscapes in the occidental tradition. They should be of particular interest here because they reveal to Americans aspects of life and character in India. A versatile and able craftsman, she has a wide range of subject and treatment. She has devoted much of her time and talent to developing Christian religious themes in Indian traditional style. Her father was the painter, Antonio Xavier Trindade of Bombay. Her family, which originated in Goa, has been Christian for 400 years. This is Miss Trindade's first visit to the United States. She has come here on her own, and will leave Washington after the Arts Club opening, for Philadelphia, where a group of her religious paintings will be exhibited on December 13.

IN THE lobby of the Dupont Theater is a striking display by Jack Perlmutter, which is attracting at least as much attention as those in the galleries. The paintings and prints are all recent work and reflect a wider range of subject and treatment than in his previous shows. Essentially, however, the point of departure is the same. Perlmutter invites an imaginative response to the ordinary. He paints the city as if he welcomed the sights and sounds and bustling tempo of life which are a part of it.

Some of Perlmutter's effects are kaleidoscopic, as in his studies of buildings where geometric patterns are accented by dots of light. Some are designedly spectacular, as in his view of "The Bridge" from an unusual angle of vision. His painting of "Surgery" is a dramatic study in light and pattern, in which the inhuman figures in white are incidental. His studies titled "House of Worship" are obscure.

To please or displease, Perlmutter's is a forceful painter's statement in which he has pulled no punches in conveying what he sees in his mind's eye. As we looked at the show we noted it compelled attention from everyone who entered the room. One spectator commented with relief that at least most of the subjects were intelligible. Another rejected the pictures as ugly. But as we sat there, a dozen people inspected every painting and the remark we heard more than once was, "That makes me think of . . . ."

Like the rest of us, they lurch unsteadily along from day to day, getting into unbelievable jams, meeting insuperable problems, achieving proud triumphs. They fall from apple trees, fight bigger kids, get lost and pull dogs' tails. A few, tragically, come to grief—but most of them come through! In miniature, of course, it's the old, old story of the human race. So long as dogs like Murphy (see photo) pull kids like Tom Boggess off railroad tracks the race isn't sunk yet!

JAMES WILSON: he began to fight back . . .

"I can do anything!"

FOR JAMES WILSON, of Jacksonville, Florida, a dream is rapidly becoming a reality.

Ever since boyhood, Wilson had wanted to study law. But when he joined the Army in 1942 he put this dream in his pocket until after the war. And then —suddenly—it disappeared entirely.

In October, 1944, Wilson was on duty as a radio operator in a B-24 that crashed during a training flight near Burlington, Vermont. As a result of the crash, he lost both arms and both legs.

For months Wilson lay silent on a hospital bed, thinking about his shattered dream. And then, gradually, he began to fight back.

But What Could He Do?

First he was outfitted with a pair of artificial arms. Painfully, he learned to manipulate them, at first, clumsily, then with increasing finesse. Finally he could light a cigarette, shave himself and operate a typewriter.

When he had re-mastered the use of hands, he slowly began to teach himself to walk again. Months passed before he could manipulate crutches but once he had conquered them he discarded them to stand unaided on artificial legs.

Wilson, who is one of this nation's two quadruple amputees of World War II, then began to pursue his dream again. Under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act (Public Law 16) and aided by the Veterans Administration, he enrolled at the University of Florida. Today he's in his third year as a pre-law student. Standing at ease in class he looks like any other student.

"When I complete work on my AB," says Wilson, "I'll enter the university law school for another three years."

After that, for Jim Wilson, it won't be a dream. He'll be a lawyer then!

SKI-TIME IS HERE!

By FRANK DeBLOIS

SOME MONDAY MORNING between now and next March you will undoubtedly come into contact with that curious biped, the ski enthusiast, migrating homeward from a week-end in New England, Lake Placid or Sun Valley.

Staring red-eyed through bandages and hobbling along on his splints, this creature will present a pitiful spectacle. But do not commiserate with him or call him harsh names, for actually he is happy in his misery.

If you live near a railroad station or airport you may have noticed that each year the number of these strange pilgrims increases. This is because the ancient art of skiing—first practiced by the wandering tribes of pre-historic Scandinavia centuries ago—has become in the past 20 years the fastest growing sport in the U. S. A.

On children's run in French Alps, small fry become top skiers early

In 1930, skiing in the Western Hemisphere was practiced by a few thousand hardy men and women, most of whom had learned how to ski in the Swiss, French and Austrian Alps. But today more than three million Americans ski every week-end all winter long and annually spend $300,000,000 for equipment, clothing, travel, and liniment—not to mention medical bills.

Since war's end, mountain ski resorts in upstate New York, New England, Nevada, Idaho, Colorado, Michigan, Minnesota, the Pacific Northwest and Canada, have become as stylish as St. Moritz and Chamonix.

As the 1949-50 ski season begins, prospects are bright. In the East, the New Haven Railroad, the New York Central, the Boston and Albany and the small spur lines of southern New England are increasing their ski resort runs by an average of ten per cent. In the West, special ski trains will take ski enthusiasts to their favorite mountains in less time than before.

In addition, the resorts themselves are reporting heavier advance booking than last year and clothing and sporting goods stores are selling more ski poles, sweaters, footwarmers and adhesive tape than they have since 1947. "All we need for a great season," one of them said, "is some snow."

Although the ski fiend traditionally dresses in the most colorful regalia he can buy, clothing firms say subdued tones have returned to popularity. Gone, say fashion authorities, are the flamboyant rainbow patterns of the recent past. Apparently this season's skier doesn't want to appear too conspicuous when he wraps himself around a tree.

But no matter how he dresses, the American skier will continue to accept the perils of his favorite sport, along with its dubious pleasures. Indeed, in some ski circles a native skier is regarded as a novice until he has broken a leg. "No one ever paid any attention to me," one skier said on his return from Lake Placid, "until I had my face lifted last winter by an oak."

Powdery snow swirls around skier who executes spectacular turn at the end of a long schuss.

ELIZABETH'S COAT OF ARMS

The New Elizabeth

BRITONS are seeing more and more of their King's eldest daughter, Princess Elizabeth. They find her radiant, increasingly mature, endowed with dignity, good sense.

By FRED DOERFLINGER

LONDON.

BRITONS EVERYWHERE are talking about the "new" Princess Elizabeth and applauding the forceful lead she is giving the nation.

Far more active than any other member of the Royal Family, the 22-year-old Elizabeth, wife, mother, and heiress presumptive to the throne, is quite noticeably tackling all her jobs with astonishing zeal.

In the opinion of most Englishmen she is fast developing into the sort of leader they would like to see on the throne.

There is a new warmth and friendliness in recent weeks about Elizabeth, Duchess of Edinburgh. Those who earlier criticized her for her "bored look" and "cold demeanor" at public ceremonies now report that she carries out public engagements with obvious enjoyment.

She Flouts a Tradition

They recall her moving radio address from Capetown on her 21st birthday in which she vowed that "my whole life, whether it be long or short, shall be devoted to your service and the service of our great Imperial family to which we all belong."

Later, on a tour of Northern Ireland, Elizabeth surprised her Belfast audience by discussing the "uneasy consciences of men."

"Today," she declared, "we are living largely on borrowed capital, inherited from previous generations, and bearing no increase now. Our children will suffer if we have nothing more, nothing fresh to offer them.

"It would be a wonderful thing if Britain, which has set the standard for the world, could now lead the way in Christian morality and a spiritual revival."

Then, only a few weeks ago, her little sermon took on a more forceful note. Speaking as wife and mother, at a rally of young women, she forthrightly and publicly blasted the evils of divorce and appealed for the re-establishment of a wise and well-balanced code of right and wrong. In doing so she flouted the tradition of royalty not to become involved in controversial matters.

This straightforward appraisal of standards of conduct captured the approval of her people. She was hailed as a new Victoria, but a Victoria without primness and prudery.

Yet Elizabeth's training for queenship was on very different lines from that of Victoria.

Victoria was kept out of touch with everything outside the court circle, but the present King and Queen have seen that Elizabeth suffered no such imprisonment. It has always been deliberate royal policy to give her as normal an outlook as possible before she feels the weight of the crown.

She Becomes More Human

Though she resembles Queen Victoria in more ways than one, Elizabeth is certainly not Victorian in outlook. Nor, on the other hand, is she excessively a modernist. She has too much character to follow fashion for fashion's sake.

Her life has necessarily been regulated but she has enjoyed considerable freedom and girlish fun while her simple, direct character has been molded.

Marriage and motherhood have helped bring out the new Elizabeth. There is no doubt that Prince Philip, who likes his beer with the boys, detests unnecessary red tape and protocol and believes in being "natural," has been largely responsible for the emergence of the "common touch" in his hitherto very royal wife.

Elizabeth, although she cannot for one moment forget she will one day be queen, no longer takes herself so

The Author: Fred Doerflinger is a veteran American news correspondent in London.

THESE ARE THE WOMEN WHO

MARY I 1552-1558
Religious zealot, she was afterward called "Bloody."

ELIZABETH 1558-1603
Nobody's dupe, she made England into great power.

SHE'S HAPPY AND BLOOMING—AND EMERGING AS A LEADER

seriously. Today, happy in her marriage and devoted to her son Prince Charles, there is nothing of the "stuffed shirt" about her. She fully realizes that she cannot be a good queen without first being a good wife and mother.

Elizabeth's position can no longer be compared with that of her younger sister Margaret. Margaret as third in line to the throne is absolved from really serious responsibilities and can enjoy more privacy and indulge in her personal tastes more freely.

Once Elizabeth was married the gay, vivacious Margaret quickly stole the spotlight with her easy manner, her night-clubbing, her numerous boy friends and her attempt at dancing the naughty can-can. She both captured the imagination and amused the people of Britain and the world.

But Elizabeth no longer has much time for frivolity. From now on she will be a busy princess concentrating on her double duty to her country and her family.

"Look at All the People!"

Her popularity with the public—never higher than today—is a different kind of popularity than that Margaret enjoys. Britain looks at the younger sister with a benevolent smile, but Britain looks up to Elizabeth!

The role of the Royal Family never changes with the government in power. Royalty is "above politics"—that is British tradition. Royalty's task is to serve Britain whether it be a "welfare state" or a citadel of private enterprise.

Elizabeth was groomed for queenship almost from the moment she learned to walk and talk. She was only a toddler visiting Queen Mary when she exclaimed with childish glee:

"Look at all the people waiting to see me go away!"

Queen Mary quickly gave orders to have Elizabeth taken out by the back way and home in a taxi. The Queen wanted the princess to learn at an early age that royalty exist to serve their people.

Elizabeth Was Rude

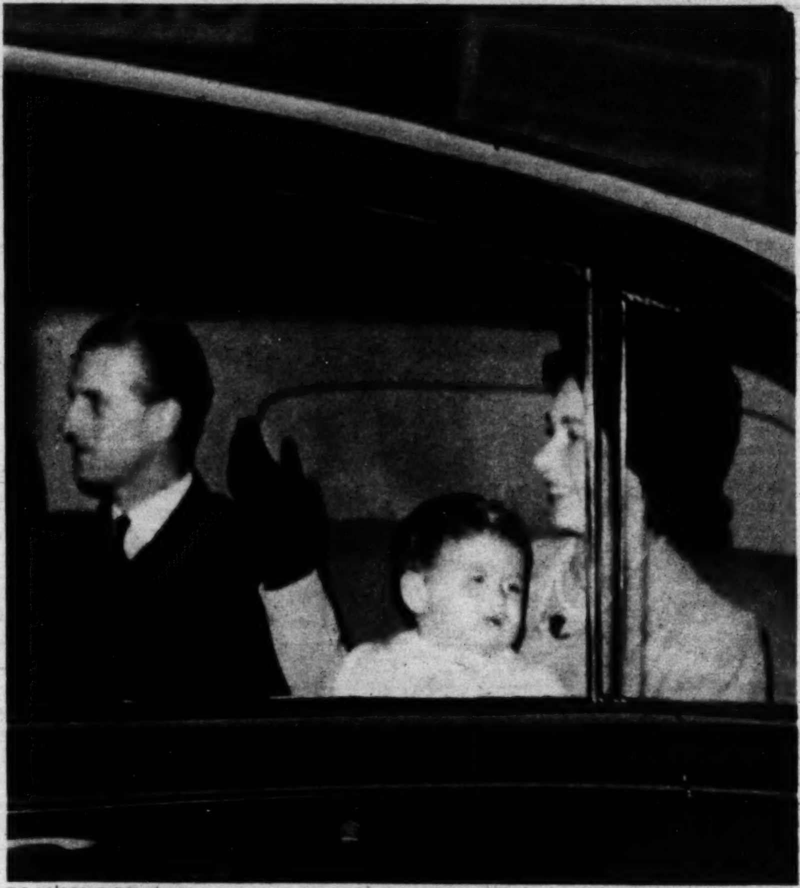
When Elizabeth was five she was rude one day to her governess, Miss Marion Crawford. As punishment her mother decided she should be "sent to Coventry" until she apologized. Next morning Elizabeth greeted "Crawfie" with her usual "good morning." There was no reply. Elizabeth tried this three times without getting an answer. Then adopting sterner measures she said, "Good morning, it's royalty speaking!"

"Crawfie" was spellbound but the Queen, concealing a titter, immediately ordered Elizabeth to apologize first for her rudeness and then again for her bad manners.

Elizabeth has matured into a pleasant, good-natured, hard-working, painstaking young woman with a strong sense of duty, a mind of her own and a great deal of confidence in her ability to carry out her tiring role now and in the future.

Britons believe Elizabeth will prove to be anything but a faineant or "do-nothing" monarch. Already she is giving the nation a strong, high-minded lead without fear of stepping on toes or unveiling unpleasant truths.

They expect further demonstrations of this courageous spirit in the years to come and today they are sincerely behind Elizabeth of England!



FAMILY DRIVE: Elizabeth, Prince Charles, aged 12 months, and husband Philip drive through London. She's seen often in public.

ELIZABETH'S DESK, covered with doo-dads (including controversial ash-tray, right), is real work-table. She has big correspondence.

IN SIDE-SADDLE, Elizabeth reviews Grenadier Guards in her capacity as honorary colonel-in-chief. Her uniform was specially designed.

At portal of "City of Hope," patient Lew Rose (left), Navy vet, leaving after 19 months of TB treatment, is met and congratulated by a friend.

Patients like these in the City of Hope elect representatives to discuss administrative matters with officials.

'CITY OF HOPE'

A hospital where no one pays—and everyone shares in running it!

By SID ROSS and DONALD WAYNE

TWENTY MILES EAST of Los Angeles, in the balmy southern California desert, stands one of the humanitarian wonders of the world. Sprawling over 75 acres of palm-planted desert is a novel kind of hospital called the City of Hope.

If you're one of the patients who come to the City of Hope from all parts of America you're in for some pleasant surprises. In the first place, nobody pays for medical care in the City of Hope.

It's Always Broke

Furthermore, it operates like no conventional hospital. Patients exercise a voice in running its affairs. A Patients' Council of elected officers holds weekly confabs with the management to discuss complaints (food, loud radios, general care) and make suggestions for improvements in routine. Patients enjoy the status of "guests," and any doctor or nurse who challenges a patient with the word "charity" in any of its malignant forms is fired on the spot. Hooked into each room is a two-way radio system, installed in such a way that no nurse can silence a patient by flipping a switch. The patient always has the last word!

Founded 37 years ago with working capital of $136.05 and two Army tents flapping in the breeze, the City of Hope is a rare example of an institution running true to an ideal. It is a charity hospital that fiercely shuns the word "charity"; and it doesn't mind being financially in the red. Its capacity: 400 patients.

"If we had a surplus," says executive director Sam Golter, "it would mean we weren't doing our job." The City of Hope, which treats lung cancer as well as TB, costs $5,200 a day to run, owes around $750,000 in debts, but goes on spending and planning as though red ink were blue. Golter says, "If the cause is good the money will come in from somewhere."

Usually it comes from a group of labor unions (among them the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union and the Baker's Union, all of which have supported it consistently by special membership levies). Yet it was Warner Brothers who gave the hospital the big push toward success. Today a network of auxiliaries covers the country, handling donations, screening applicants, promoting expansion.

Today with medical problems confronting hundreds of cities and rural areas, the methods of the big desert hospital are worth examining.

Emphasis on Pleasant Surroundings

Pleasant surroundings are planned for their morale and therapeutic value—important factors in treating TB. "Hospital atmosphere" is played down. Patients' rooms are cheery and home-like, have radios and even television sets; there is a library and a recreation room – and ambulatory cases stroll over the landscaped grounds in the desert air. Because TB is a long-term disease – even slight cases don't cure under 18 months –the Social Service bureau will often transport a husband or wife to California and find him or her a job so that the patient's mind is eased. Such psychological treatment helps produce remarkable results. Its record of cures has caused the hospital to be dubbed "city of miracles." Patients are also rehabilitated socially and reeducated in new trades and professions–for new lives when they are discharged. This is important therapy.

In its social workings the hospital is a sort of practical utopia. Patients, who for reasons of space are admitted at the rate of one in 10 applications, come from every state in the Union, and from overseas. TB is a disease that teaches kinship among its sufferers, overcoming superficial prejudices. To all, the hospital effuses a principle, a credo based on the words of the great French scientist Pasteur, who said: "We do not ask of an unfortunate: what country do you come from or what is your religion? We say to him: you suffer, that is enough. You belong to us; we shall make you well."

The City of Hope is always working on new procedures. This year from Duarte has come a new surgical development: the extra-fascial lucite plombage method of lung collapse. It was perfected by Dr. Alfred Goldman, medical director.

Chest Full of Plastic Balls

Standard way of deflating a lung, especially with far advanced disease, is by thoracoplastic surgery: cutting away rib sections. This leaves the diseased portion of the lung permanently out of commission. Dr. Goldman's method, based on earlier work in Norway by Dr. Carl Semb, is to make the usual incision in the chest, then to fill the extra-fascial space underneath the ribs with small lucite balls. After the operation the patient rattles internally until body fluids fill in the space. He will spend the rest of his life with 20-odd plastic marbles within his chest wall to keep the affected part of his lung deflated. But operative risks are reduced.

The City of Hope grew out of a meeting back in 1912 of the Workman's Circle in the Boyle Heights section of Los Angeles. Branch members dying of the then dreaded "consumption" were flocking in droves to California, and a collection of $136.05 was taken up to start a sanatorium. Local housewives passed the hat throughout the neighborhood until there was enough to buy a cheap desert lot and the two tents. These were bravely inscribed "The Los Angeles Sanatorium." One patient was installed, and a nurse occupied the other tent.

Treatment everywhere in those days was primitive. Tuberculars in the East were either isolated in groups, dosed with cough medicine and left to recover or die, or, more hopefully, they migrated to higher altitudes—which in itself did little to cure. So feared was the "white plague" that victims were shunned by their own families. In Los Angeles they were allowed to put up a tent in the back yard but not to go inside the house.

THEATRE and entertainment center was donated by San Francisco, Oakland groups.

After the Big Killers

The City of Hope grew from tent to shack to institution, but up to 1930 was no more than a TB rest home. Then Hollywood's Warner Brothers donated a Medical Building with new research facilities, and the medical center idea began to materialize. At that time doctors were developing surgical methods of treating TB—which proved to be the most important factor in its decline—and money for research and enlargement poured into the City of Hope, mainly from labor unions and fraternal groups that were its original backers. Tuberculosis has been the special scourge of industrial workers, and that is why organized labor has been the single most consistent angel of the City of Hope. Some of the hospital buildings are named for unions like the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the ILGWU, the Millinery Workers' Union and the Baker's Union, which raised money for the Duarte center by taxing members.

Among the individuals who nurtured and supported the idea were Jewish workmen and business men. Yet the men who run it today stress one fact: it is open to all—the Kellys and Schmidts and DiPaolis. Its president today is Victor M. Carter and its medical director is A. E. T. Rogers.

The big shift of U.S. population to the west coast during and since the war has created new demands for room at the Duarte center. Since 1946 an expansion program has been under way to establish a research center for all kinds of chest diseases, and to add an educational wing—courses for doctors and medical school undergraduates—and a nurse's training school. This program will make the City of Hope one of the largest medical institutions in the world—where four of the nation's top killers—chest diseases, cancer, heart disease and rheumatic fever—will be treated.

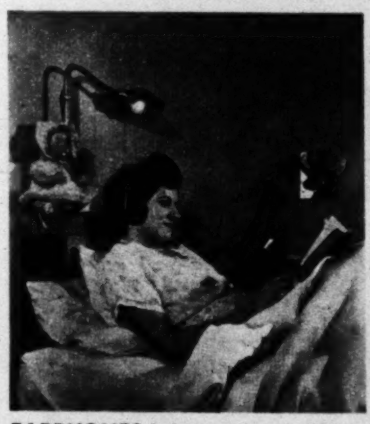
$10,000 They Couldn't Afford

If, at present, the program is hamstrung for lack of funds, that sort of thing has never stopped the City of Hope. When streptomycin was announced as a possible wonder drug for TB, the City of Hope was one of the first to try it out at a time when it cost $10,000 a treatment. (The antibiotic drug proved no wonder drug for TB but it does help in certain cases.)

Surgery is still the great hope in serious TB cases. Artificial lung collapse like pneumothorax and thoracoplasty has been largely responsible for knocking TB down from first place to seventh as a fatal disease. Another major aid is early diagnosis by X-ray.

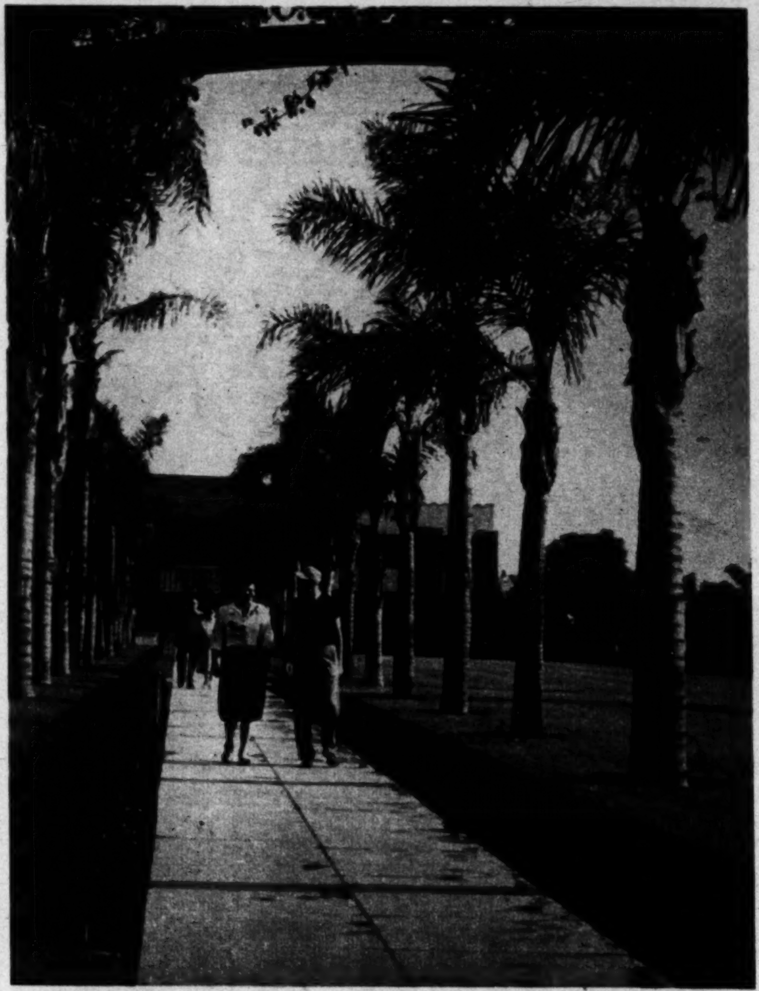
The City of Hope manages to benefit not only science and medicine but humanity as a whole with its unorthodox methods. With no bankroll in a dollar world, it proceeds upon its own answer to a question that bothered Cain in the Book of Genesis. Man, asserts the City of Hope, is his brother's keeper.

PATIENTS RELAX in afternoon rest period outside one of the bungalows donated by individuals, labor organizations. Some were given by families.



EARPHONES bring patient religious services from hospital's own Temple.

"CO-OP" is owned, run by patients. Profits go toward welfare activities.



LANDSCAPED GROUNDS donated by Warner Brothers, put City of Hope in beautiful setting. Hospital started 37 years ago in a tent in the desert.

SOMETHING for the wife: Henry Morgan, as the Practical Man, suggests these.

WITH ONLY 12 shopping days before Christmas, millions of Americans will step up the pace of their pre-Yuletide frenzy from now until good old St. Nick flounders down the traditional chimney, if any.

To show some of the perils of the season, PARADE arranged with Gimbel's department store in New York to coach comedienne Ethel Merman and radio's funnyman Henry Morgan in the finer points of Christmas shopping (as seen by the patient clerks behind the counters).

They suffered no more damage than a bruised ankle (Morgan), a torn-fingernail (Merman), and a resolve to shop early (photographer).

Real life shoppers, to say nothing of the store clerks, will probably have a Christmas to remember. Early estimates have put the 1949 Christmas volume in toy sales alone at approximately a half-billion dollars worth—an all-time record.

Roughly speaking, all Christmas shoppers fall into at least one of the categories illustrated, not counting children, who are just shopping around for Santa Claus, and mail-order shoppers, who don't risk anything more than stamp-sickness.

By Christmas Eve, the annual free-for-all will have passed into silence and near-collapse, with the presents wrapped and delivered, the spirit of good will safe. On your marks! Go!

Little plum puddings, in fancy molds or ramekins, make doubly-welcome Christmas gift.

HOLIDAY steamed pudding

Grate raw vegetables after all ingredients are ready to mix.

Grease pudding molds. Sprinkle sugar to make a pretty glaze.

Cover pudding molds snugly; tie. Make loop for lifting out later.

PLUM PUDDING for Christmas is as traditional as holly. Fat little puddings, bursting with fruit and nuts, make wonderful gifts, doubly welcome when they are presented in the attractive molds or ramekins in which they were cooked. (Save a pudding for your own feast, of course!)

We chose little aluminum molds, shaped like Christmas stars and bells 4, 6 or 8 to a gift box, depending on the size of the family; oven-glass ramekins, thin and delicate to look at, but sturdy and heatproof; charming blue-banded white ramekins with their own tight-fitting covers.

Holiday Steamed Pudding

- 1 1/4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon cloves
- 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/3 cup diced candied citron
- 1/3 cup diced candied lemon and orange peel, mixed
- 1/3 cup candied cherries, sliced
- 1 cup seedless raisins
- 1 cup coarsely chopped walnut meats
- 1/2 cup shortening
- 1 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup molasses
- 2 eggs, well beaten
- 1 cup drained, crushed pineapple
- 1 cup grated raw carrot
- 1 cup grated raw potato

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Add fruits and walnuts. Cream shortening and sugar until fluffy; add molasses, eggs and pineapple (mixture will look curdled). Grate carrots and potatoes; add. Stir in flour-fruit mixture, mix until "curdling" disappears. Grease pudding molds; sprinkle with sugar. Fill molds 2/3 full; cover snugly, set on rack in kettle. Pour in boiling water to 1/3 depth of molds. Cover; boil 1 to 3 hours, depending on size.

Tyrone Power becomes an

Ambassador-by-Accident

ON LOCATION in French Morocco, where he completed the historical drama "Prince of Foxes" (20th Century-Fox), Power shows Linda Christian an ancient native knife.

By KAY SULLIVAN

NOBODY IN HOLLYWOOD seems to wear romantic, swashbuckling costumes as well—or as often—as Tyrone Power. In some 17 films to date Power has donned plumed hat, velvet jerkin and sword to go forth and (1) triumph over an enemy and (2) win a fair lady. His latest role in "Prince of Foxes" finds him resplendent in Renaissance robes.

Actually, the simple garb of a 20th century diplomat would be far more suitable for Power. Reason: he holds a Hollywood record for farflung junketing, having visited more than 50 countries since 1946.

Somehow, Power has found himself in the role of unofficial – but none-the-less effective—ambassador for Hollywood in particular and all Americans in general. Wherever he has gone, he has left a friendly and indelible impression. His picture still hangs in South African schoolrooms where he talked about U. S. teenagers. And in a leading hotel in Colombia, one of the first greetings you get is: "Tyrone Power slept here!"

Power became a goodwill agent quite by accident. In 1946 he and Cesar Romero flew down to Central and South America on a holiday. Wherever they stopped, citizens turned out en masse, not only bobby-soxers, but Presidents, Ambassadors and leading politicos. So good were the reports that 20th Century-Fox the following year gave him time for another junket. This time he flew to South Africa. In 1948 he goodwilled in Mexico, and in 1949 he did more of the same in Europe.

Since Power, now aged 36, has become such a salesman for America, Americans are entitled to know what kind of representative he is abroad.

What Kind of Impression?

Aside from Hollywood's enthusiasts, U. S. travelers abroad reported that in this romantic actor Americans actually had the finest possible kind of representation. People of other lands found him not flashy or flamboyant but poised, honestly friendly and tactful. Said one: America could use more practical ambassadors like this!

Even during the public hysteria attending his January wedding to Linda Christian in Rome, Power was calm, self-possessed. He emerged with the respect of critical Romans.

Power, a former Marine lieutenant who flew a C-46 during the war, comes from a family famous on the stage for more than a century. His European tour was an expansion of a trip begun to complete "Prince of Foxes."

Now back in Hollywood, America's unofficial ambassador is busy with maps again. His goal for 1950: the Orient.

IN ROME, in beret, motorist Power says goodbye to hotel staff with whom he was a favorite.

IN U.S. after a goodwill tour of four continents, he greets reporters. Plane, named for one of his movie roles, lists places he visited.

IN PANAMA, goodwill ambassador Power chats with U.S. Ambassador. His friend Cesar Romero sits with him.

IN SOUTH AFRICA, hero Power is hailed by school children. He often loses ties, buttons, jacket sleeves to enthusiastic admirers.

HOLDING HIS HAT on his head, old-timer E. L. Horton has pulled the trigger and is waiting for his ancient "hawg rifle" to go off. (See story.)

Old Guns Roar in North Carolina

BEEF SHOOT

PRIZE was this steer, which was later quartered for the winners.

THE MAN HOLDING HIS HAT in the photograph above is E. L. Horton of Democrat, N. C., oldest contestant this year in North Carolina's annual "beef shoot."

When somebody asked why he lay on his back to shoot he seemed surprised. "Always have," he growled, and went on shooting.

He had nothing else to say, nor did the silent spectators behind him. Still a good shot at 78, and mighty proud, Horton was one of 50 contestants. They gathered at Waynesville, N. C. to lie behind a well-worn log and plug lead balls at diamond-shaped targets for the honor of taking home, as a prize, a big chunk of a fat steer.

It was a damp day, and at times the big "hawg rifles" were slow to fire. When his picture was taken, Horton had tripped the hammer, the old-time powder cap had exploded with a faint bang, and he was waiting for the big charge to go off. It did, with a roar, seconds later.

Once Horton's gun failed to go off at all. This also happened to others. Such misfires produced the only loud words spoken all day:

"Hold her up! Hold her up! Don't point her at nobody!"

Gun Finally Goes Off

This was a signal (probably dating back to Colonial America) to the contestant to point his gun in the air. After what seemed like minutes there might be a roar and an eruption of smoke, and the ball would go flying off into the dim and cloudy Carolina sky.

Misfires are serious to mountain hunters who still use their precious muzzle-loaders to bring home meat. But when the powder gets damp nothing can be done about it.

Sharp eyes sighted along the old barrels. When someone asked Verland Gibson (right) why he wasn't shooting, he snapped:

"Eyes gone bad on me, that's why! Man, when I shoot to hit a squirrel's eye I don't want to blow his haid off!"

SMOKE RISES as only woman in contest scores hit on her target. Each contestant was allowed three shots at 60 yards.

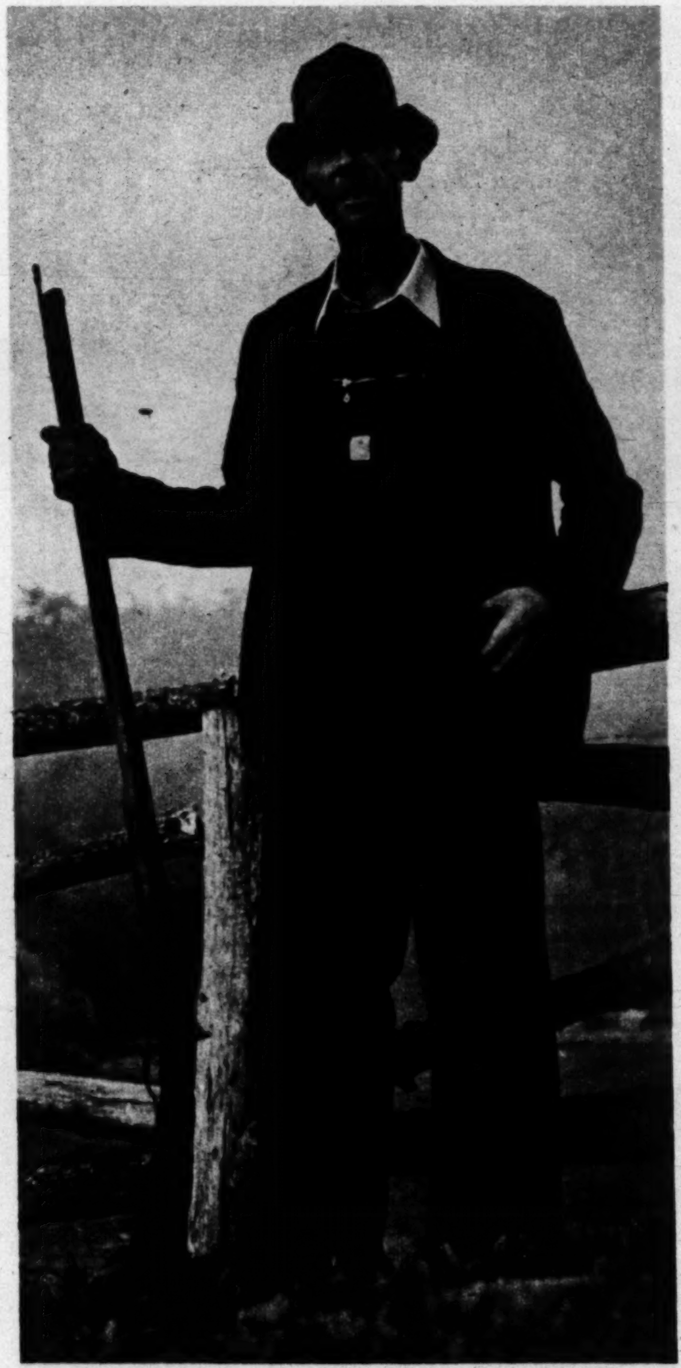
YOUNGEST CONTESTANT in shoot was Frank "Tyker" Miller, jr., 11. His sponsor, Dan'l Boone Arrington, 73, stands behind.

Silent mountain men test their aim with ancient muzzle-loaders

TARGETS were paper sheets with small diamond-shaped aperture.

LOCAL TRIO was on hand to entertain the spectators. Shoot lasted from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

EYES BAD, Verland Gibson, 86, decided to watch, did not shoot.



THE WINNER: Goler Green, a farmer. He made day's best shot by placing a ball within ⅛-inch of exact center of the diamond.

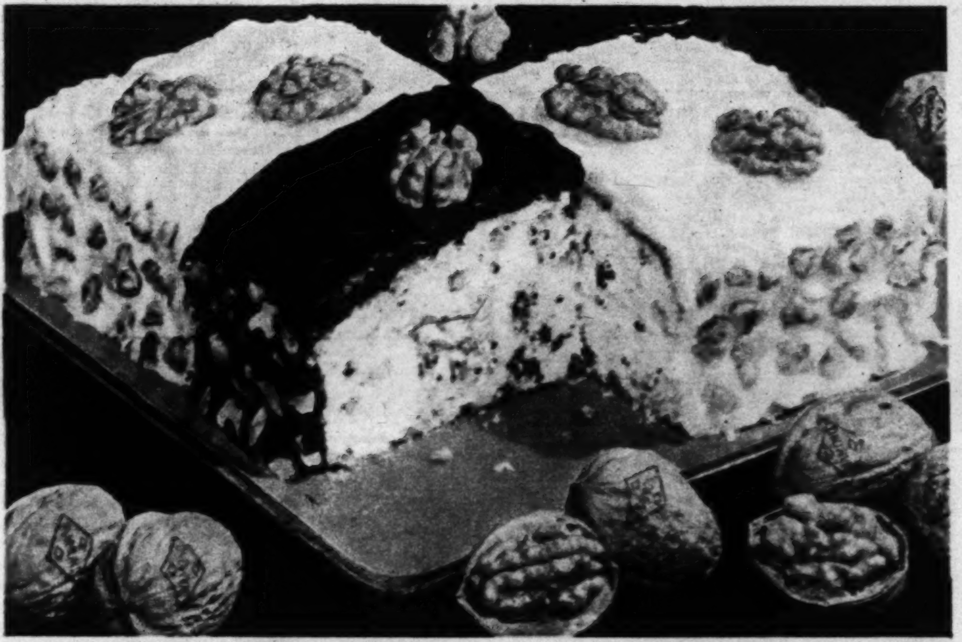
It's fun for youngsters to make candy! And they get real nourishment from walnuts in homemade sweets like fudge and divinity. See that they use Diamond Walnuts—for more usable kernels per pound. Better looks, better flavor, too!

All dressed up—cinnamon apples double as dessert or salad! Cook peeled apples till bright red in sugar syrup with red cinnamon candies. Fill with cottage cheese and chopped Diamond Walnuts. Top with golden walnut halves.

All these holiday treats . . .



What a treat for cake-lovers! Delicate walnut cake with golden walnut halves on a two-tone icing! And just one pound of Diamond Walnuts makes the cake plus these other treats!

HARLEQUIN WALNUT CAKE

1½ cups plus 2 tbsps. sifted cake flour	½ cup milk
1 cup sugar	½ tsp. vanilla extract
2¼ tsps. double-acting baking powder	½ tsp. lemon extract
½ tsp. salt	3 egg whites, unbeaten
⅓ cup emulsifier-type shortening	½ cup finely chopped Diamond Walnuts
	Diamond Walnut halves for decorating

Have shortening, milk, eggs at room temperature. Line bottom of 8x8x2-inch pan with waxed paper; grease paper. Sift flour, sugar, baking powder, salt into bowl. Add shortening, milk and extracts; stir together, then beat 2 min. on electric mixer (slow to medium speed) or by hand (250 to 300 strokes), scraping sides of bowl often. Add egg whites; beat 2 min. more. Lightly stir in chopped Diamond Walnuts —good rule for better flavor in any cake! Pour into pan. Bake at 375° F. 10 min., then at 350° F. 35 to 40 min. longer. Turn out, remove paper, cool. Cut in fourths, frost two quarters with vanilla frosting, two with chocolate. Put together as shown. Decorate with Diamond Walnuts—plump halves on top, chopped pieces on the sides.

from just one pound of DIAMOND WALNUTS

THEY'RE CHEAPER, TOO! The new low prices on Diamond Walnuts give you a thrifty way to be festive! Look how much you get from just one pound! All 3 tempters here, or several of your own walnut favorites. It pays to look for the Diamond brand —for plump, crisp kernels—more for your money every time!

* * * * *

In-shell Diamond Walnuts packed in 1 lb. cellophane bags (red for large size, blue for medium). Ready-shelled Diamonds, mixed halves and pieces, in 8 and 4 oz. cans—vacuum-packed to stay fresh and sweet!

See for yourself!

One pound of Diamond Walnuts yields 2 cups of halves and broken kernels—plus extra halves for decorating. Shell the full pound; store unused kernels in tightly closed jar in your refrigerator.

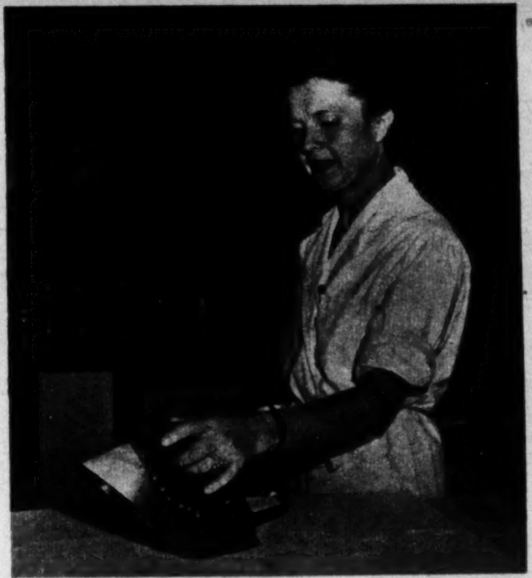
Gadgets from Paris

French inventors exhibit products of their genius, and Madame and M'sieur gawk like anybody else

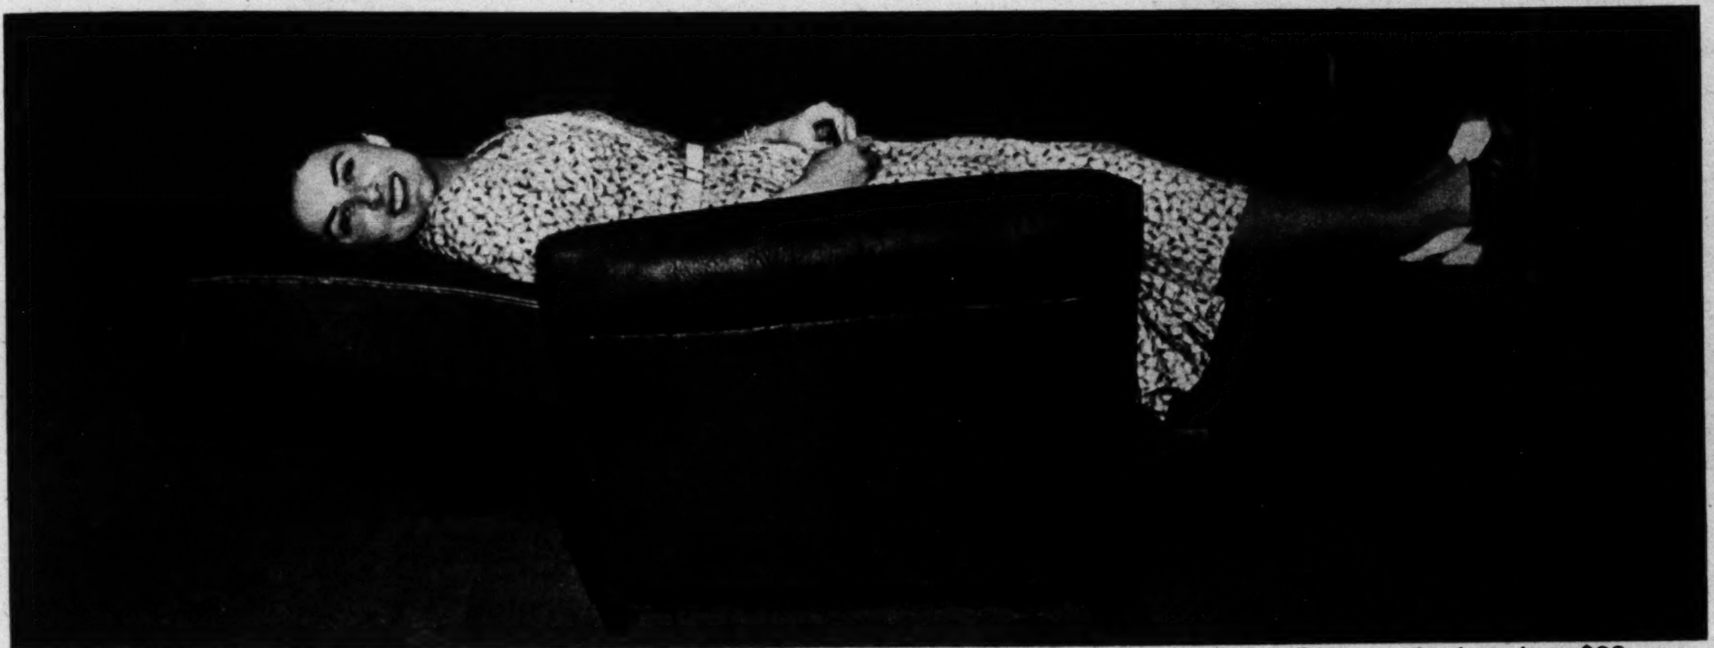
WHEREVER GADGETS are on display, people will stop and gawk. With this in mind, a group of French inventors recently packed up their brain-children, converged on Paris and hired a hall.

There, in individual booths, about 300 bright-idea men hopefully put their inventions on exhibition. Among them were practical, labor-saving devices, mechanical novelties and glittering gimmicks—all with "made in France" labels.

Some inventors displayed as many as 15 devices. During the week-long exhibit, professional demonstrators showed Parisians how the gadgets worked, while inventors kept their eyes open for any manufacturer who might be persuaded to put their inventions into production.

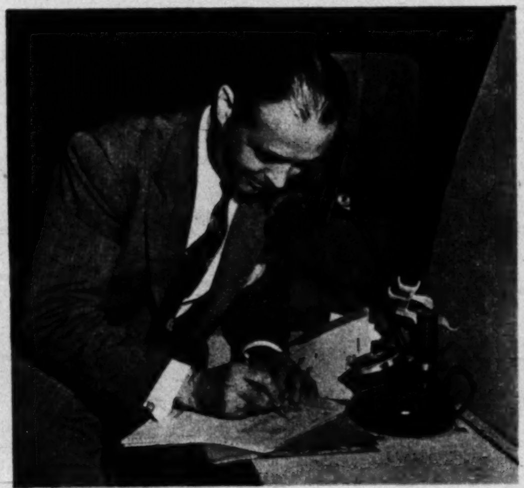


TIP-UP IRON prevents scorched ironing. Made with slanting "heel," it flips up when hand is removed.



Easy chair that unfolds into bed is shown by model at French inventors' show in Paris. Called "Tourepos," it was priced at about $82.

A COAT-HANGER, mais oui, but a hanger with a difference! Observe, Madame, it folds up like this.



'PHONE RACK permits M'sieur to write while talking. He clips the receiver on the extension—et voila!

"TOUTENPLACE" BAG has a place for everything. To be sure, Madame, there will never be enough room!

TERRY AND THE PIRATES
GEORGE WUNDER
GIG, DARLING! WHAT'S HAPPENING? I HEAR SHOTS AND YELLS—SOUNDS LIKE A SMALL WAR.
NO SENSE IN LYING TO YOU, DARLING... THE PEOPLE WHO HELD YOU POSTED A BOUNTY FOR THE RETURN OF ESCAPED POLITICAL PRISONERS... A GANG OF LOCAL HILL-BANDITS IS TRYING TO COLLECT.
A PARTY OF THEM ATTACKED THE INN SUDDENLY, IN THE DARK. SMASHED THE GATE IN WITH GRENADES AND GOT INSIDE BEFORE THE DRAGON LADY'S MEN COULD RALLY. THE MAIN FORCE WILL FOLLOW THEM IN... OH, GARY! I'M AFRAID...
MEANWHILE
TERRY, YOU SPLENDID, RECKLESS FOOL! WHO ELSE WOULD HAVE THOUGHT TO RUN MY CAR INTO THE GATEWAY—AND SET IT AFIRE.
YOU RIFLEMEN! GIVE HIM COVERING FIRE!
ATTA GIRL, D.L.! THESE JOCKOES WERE BREATHING DOWN MY NECK.
THE ASSAULT GROUP, SUDDENLY ISOLATED IN THE COURTYARD, MILLS ABOUT IN CONFUSION.
WHILE THE DRAGON LADY'S MEN, HEARTENED BY THE QUICK CHANGE OF ADVANTAGE, SNIPE EXPERTLY FROM WALLS AND BUILDINGS.
OUTSIDE, THE BANDITS' MAIN FORCE, UNABLE TO RUSH THE FLAMING ENTRANCE AND HARASSED BY SNIPING FIRE FROM A SMALL GROUP OF DEFENDERS ON THE WALL, LOSES HEART.
THE SOUNDS FROM WITHIN SLACKEN, MASTER.
ORDER THE RETREAT.
AND A SHORT TIME LATER...

Prince Valiant IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR
BY HAROLD R FOSTER
Synopsis: FOR STEALING THE KING'S HORSES GEOFF IS BANISHED FROM THE KINGDOM FOR A YEAR AND A DAY, TO WANDER PENNILESS, HOMELESS IN FOREIGN LANDS! HE IS PLACED ABOARD A BARGE ALONG WITH OTHER TRAVELERS AND ROWED TO THE SEA.
IT IS NOT UNTIL THEY ALL BOARD THE SAME VESSEL THAT THE WONDERFUL TRUTH DAWNS ON HIM; THAT HE IS GOING TO NEWCASTLE, TOO, AND WILL ONCE AGAIN BE WITH ALETA AND PRINCE VALIANT!
KATWIN SEES THE PUZZLED LOOK ON HIS FACE. "THE KING IS A GREAT-HEARTED GENTLEMAN," SHE SAYS, "AND HE REMEMBERED THAT HE TOO WAS A TROUBLESOME LAD ONCE!"
SO THEY LEAVE THE CALM WATERS OF THE SOLENT AND SAIL UP THE WINDY CHANNEL TOWARD THE NORTH SEA.
AND THE NORTH SEA IS UNKIND TO A LAD WHO HAS NEVER SAILED BEFORE.
THEY ENTER THE CALM REACHES OF THE TYNE RIVER AND BOTH THE SHIP AND GEOFF'S STOMACH CEASE ROCKING.
AS THE ANCHOR IS DROPPED AT NEWCASTLE, THE FIRST TO GREET THEM IS ALETA, ANXIOUS TO HOLD HER SMALL SON ONCE MORE IN HER ARMS.
